

Printed for John Williams Junior, at the Crown in Little-Britain. 1673.

TO THE
P R I N C E.

Tr R.
914.96
q 5222 T

SIR,

THE Eminence of the degree wherein God and Nature hath placed you, doth allure the eyes; and the hopefulness of your Virtues, win the love of all men. For virtue being in a private person an exemplary ornament; advanceth it self in a Prince to a publick blessing. And, as the Sun to the world, so bringeth it both light and life to a Kingdom; a light of direction by glorious example, and a life of joy through a gracious Government. From the just and serious consideration whereof, there springeth in minds not brutish, a thankful correspondence of affection and duty; still pressing to express themselves in endeavours of service. Which also hath caused me (most noble Prince) not furnished of better means, to offer in humble zeal to your Princely view these my doubled Travels; once with some toil and danger performed, and now recorded with sincerity and diligence. The parts I speak of are the most renowned Countries and Kingdoms: once the Seats of most glorious and triumphant Empires; the Theatres of valour and heroical actions; the soils enriched with all earthly felicities; the places where Nature hath produced her wonderful works; where Arts and Sciences have been invented and perfected; where wisdom, virtue, policy, and civility have been planted, have flourished: and lastly, where God himself did place his own Common-wealth, gave Laws and Oracles, inspired his Prophets, sent Angels to converse with men; above all, where the Son of God descended to become man ; where he honoured the earth with his beautiful steps, wrought the work of our Redemption, triumphed over death, and ascended into glory. Which Countries, once so glorious and famous for their happy estate, are now through vice and ingratitude, become the most deplored spectacles of extream misery ; the wild beasts of mankind having broken in upon them, and rooted out all civility, and the pride of a stern and barbarous Tyrant possessing the Thrones of ancient and just Dominion. Who aiming only at the height of greatness and sensuality, hath in tract of time reduced so great and goodly a part of the world, to that lamentable distress and servitude, under which (to the astonishment of the understanding beholders) it now faints and groaneth. Those rich lands at this present remain waste and overgrown with bushes, receptacles of wild beasts, of thieves and murderers, large Territories dispeopled, or thinly inhabited ; good Cities made desolate ; sumptuous buildings become ruines, glorious Temples either subverted, or prostituted to impiety ; true Religion discountenanced and oppressed, all Nobility extinguished ; no light of learning permitted, nor virtue cherished : violence and rapine insulting over all, and leaving no security save to an abject mind, and unlook'd on poverty. Which calamities of theirs, so great and deserved are to the rest of the world as threatening instructions. For assistance wherein, I have not only related what I saw of their present condition, but so far as conveniency might permit, presented a brief view of their former estates, and first antiquities of those people and countries : thence to draw a right image of the frailty of man, the mutability of whatsoever is worldly ; and assurance that as there is nothing unchangeable saving God, so nothing stable but by his Grace and Protection. Accept, Great Prince, these weak endeavours of a strong desire : which shall be always devoted to do your Highness all acceptable service, and ever rejoice in your prosperity and happiness.

GEORGE SANDYS.

A.
RELATION OF A JOURNEY;

CONTAINING

A Description of the Turkish Empire of Egypt, of the Holy Land, of the remote Parts of Italy, and ISLANDS adjoining.

THE FIRST BOOK.

Began my Journey through France, hard upon the time when that execrable Murther was committed upon the person of Henry the Fourth, by an obscure Varlet, even in the streets of his principal City, by day, and then when Royally attended; to shew that there is none so contemptible, that contemneth his own life, but is the master of another mans. Triumphs were interrupted by Funerals, and mens minds did labour with fearful expectations. The Princes of the Blood discontented, the Nobles factious: those of the Religion daily threatned, and nightly fearing a Massacre. Mean-while a number of Souldiers are drawn by small numbers into the City to confront all outrages.

France I forbear to speak of, and the less remote parts of Italy, daily surveyed and exactly related. At Venice I will begin my Journal. From whence we departed on the 20. of August 1610. in the little Defence of London. Two days after we touched at Rovigno, a Town of Istria, and under the Venetians, high-mounted on a Hill, not unfruitful in Olives; the Haven convenient and guarded with a Castle. Here those that are bound for Venice, do take a Pilot for their securer entrance at the Bars of Malamocco. The Town is poor (as are the rest thereof) by reason of the Neighbourhood of Venice, some twenty leagues distant, which doth draw unto it the general Commerce: they prohibiting all Traffick elsewhere throughout the whole Gulph. The Country adjoining, mountainous and wide, yet celebrated for Quarries of excellent Marble, which do so adorn the Venetian Palaces: one Mountain surmounting the rest, called Monte majore, first discovered by the Sailer, abounding with rare and far-fought Physical Simples. The Istrians are said to descend of the Colchians, of those that were sent by Oeta in pursuit of the Argonauts. Their chief City is called Cape d'Istria, heretofore Justinopolis of Justinian the Builder.

B

This

This Sea (now the Gulph of Venice) was formerly named Adriaticum of Adria, a famous City built by the Trojans at the mouth of Eridanus.

Olim ingens decus Thesperis, lux addita terræ,
Eridani cunus proluit unda pedes :
Nunc vix nomen habet, lethoque informis cadaver,
Et famulis fordens Adria putret aquis.
Transitum est alto Imperium totulque reculit :
Ecce novos dicit præcipua ruina lacer.
Dira tamen frustra facias fortuna superbus.
Disfite quam valcant scelerata manere diu.
Nunc igitur melius mea res : secuta timoris,
Cum vigo, fortis lege locuta mea.

I. C. Scaliger.

Of this, the there born Emperour Adrian received his name. The Gulph divideth Italy from Illyria, joyning East-ward with the Mediterranean, about the Cape of Otranto : being seven hundred miles in length, and twen score in latitude. It affordeth few Harbours unto Italy, (Ancona, Brundisium, and Otranto, the principal, and almost only) but many to the opposite shore, with multitudes of Islands. A Sea tempestuous and unfairful : at an instant incensed with sudden gulls ; but chiefly with the Southern winds.

Quo non arberit Adria :
Major, tollere seu potest vult fra.
Hor. l. 1. Ode 3.

The pride of Italy, thus did below
On Earth a beauty, wastef by silver Po :
Scarce nam'd, a deform'd carcase, noysom stream
Now Adria vents, being foul in her own streams.
Empire, and rite, both from thee are born :
And thy old ruines never Lar's adorn.
Fortune thou falsly listest up on high :
Of Scepters see the perpetuity !
In better state now stand I, dispossess
Of fears : from my bard destinies release.

On Adria none more great than those :
Would they enrage, or few compose.

But more dreadful are the Northern, beating upon the harbourless shore. The Venicians are Lords of this Sea, but not without contention with the Papacy. On Ascension-day the Duke, accompanied with the Clarissimo's of that Signiory, is rowed thither in the Bucentoro, a triumphal Galley, richly and exquisitely gilded : above there is a room (beneath which they row) comprehending the whole length and breadth of that Galley, near the Poup a Throne ; the rest accommodated with seats, where he solemnly cspoweth the Sea, confirmed by a Ring thrown therein : the Nuptial pledge and Symbole of subjection. This Ceremony received a beginning from that same Sea-battel fought and won by the Venicians, under the conduct of Sebastiano Zuni, against the Forces of Frederick Barbaross, in the quartel of Pope Alexander the Third : who flying the Emperours tury, in the habit of a Cook, repaired to Venice, and there lived long disguised in the Monastery of Charity. Zuni returning in Triumph with the Emperours Son, was met by the Pope, and saluted in this manner : Here take, Oh Zuni, this Ring of Gold, and by giving it to the Sea, oblige it unto thee. A Ceremony that shall on this day be yearly observed, both by thee and thy Successors : that posterity may know how you have purchased the Dominion thereof by your valours, and made it subject unto you, as a Wife to her Husband. But the Pirates herabout do now more than share with them in that Sovereignty, who gather such courage from the timoroulness of divers, that a little Frigate will often not fear to venture on an Argosie : nay, some of them will not abide the encounter ; but run ashore before the pursuer : (as if a Whale should flye from a Dolphin) glad that with wrack of Ship, and loss of Goods they may prolong a despised life, or retain undervend liberty.

We failed all along in the fight of Dalmatia, which lyeth between Istria and Epirus, called anciently Illyria, of Ilyrius the Son of Cadmus ; afterwards Dalmatia, of the City Dalminium ; and at this day Selavonia, of the Selavi a people of Sarmatia : who leaving their own homes in the Reign of Justinian, were planted by him in Thracia, and afterward in the days of Mauritius and Phocas, became possessors of his Country. Patient they are of labour, and able of body. The meaner sort will tug lustily at an Oar, and are by their Sovereigns of Venice (such as remain under that State) employed to that purpose. The Women married not till the age of 24, nor the men until 30, perhaps the cause of their strength, and so big proportions : or for that bred in a mountainous Country, who are generally observed to over-size those that dwell on low levels. Three thousand Horsemen of this Country, and the Islands herabout are enrolled in the Venetian Militia. They dissent not from the Greek Church in their Religion, gion. Throughout the North part of the World their Language is understood and spoken : even from thence almost to the Conines of Tartaria. The men wear half-sleeved Gowns of Violet-cloth, with Bonnets of the same. They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads, the rest all shaven. The Women wear theirs not long, and dye them black for the most part. Their chief City is Ragusa (heretofore Epidaurus) a Common-wealth of it self : famous for Merchandize and plenty of Shipping. Many small Islands belong thereunto, but little of the Continent. They pay Tribute to the Turk 14000 Zecchins yearly, and spend as much more upon them in gifts and entertainment : sending the Grand Signior every year a Ship laden with Pitch for the use of his Gallies, whereby they purchase their peace, and a discharge of Duties throughout the Ottoman Empire.

Coreia, the first Island of note that we pass by, lyeth in the Ionian Sea ; stretching East and West in form of a Bow : 54 miles long, 24 broad ; and distant about 12 from the Main of Epirus. Called formerly Cocyræ, of Coreyra the Daughter of Æolus there buried : but more anciently Phæacia. Celebrated by Homer for the shipwrack of Ulysses, and Orchards of Alcinous.

These at no time do their rare fruit forego :
Still breathing Zephyrus makes some to grow
Others to ripen. Growing fruits supply
The gathered : and succeed so orderly.

Ex his fructus nunquam perit, neque deficit,
Hymæ, neque æliæ, toto anno durans, sed sine semper
Zephyrus spirans hæc crescere facit aliæque maturecere.
Primum post primum fenescit, pomum post pomum,
Porro post uvam uva, ficus post ficum.
Hom. Od. 4. 1.

The South part thereof is mountainous, and defective in waters : where they sow little Corn, in that subject to be blasted by the Southern winds, at such times as it floweth : the North part level ; the whole adorned with Groves of Oranges, Lemons, Pomegranates, Fig-trees, Olives, and the like ; enriched with excellent Wines and abundance of Honey. Upon the North-side stands a City that takes the name of the Island, with a Castle strongly seated on a high Rock, which joyneth by an Isthmos to the land, and impregnablely fortified. The Turks have testified as much in their many repulces. It is the Chair of an Archbishop : inhabited for the most by Cretians, as is the whole Island, and subject to the Venicians.

St. Maura lyeth next unto this : once adjoining to the Continent, and separated by the labour of the Inhabitants : yet no further removed than by a Bridge to be past into. Called it was formerly Leucadia, of a white Rock which lyeth before it, towards Cephalonia, on which stood the Temple of Apollo : from whence by leaping into the Sea, it is said, that such as unfortunately loved, were cured of that fury. To this the Poetress Sappho was thus advised.

Hie to Ambracia, since unequal fires
Consume thee. From a rock, there that aspires :
Phæbus doth all the ample deep survey :
Men call't Altheum and Leucadia.
Deucalion mad for Pyrrha, grief to ease,
Leapt down from thence, and safely prest the Sea.
Forthwith chang'd Love fled from the careless breast
Of drench'd Deucalion, and his fury ceast.
That place retains this vertue : thither haste,
And fear not from on high thy self to cast.

— Quoniam non ignibus æquis
Uteris, Ambracia est terra petenda tibi.
Phæbus ab excelso, quantum patet, aspicit æquor,
Altheum populi, Leucadiæque vocent.
Nunc te Deucalion Pyrrha lucentius amore
Mittit & illic corpore pressit aquas.
Nec mora, veritus amor fugit lenissima meris
Fœdera : Deucalion igne levatus erat.
Hanc legem locus ille tenet : prece proximus altem
Leucada : nec faxo defuisse time.

Ovid. Ep. 21.

And so she did, if we may credit Menander.

Who with ambitious glory stung
And scorn'd Loves fury, head-long flung
Her self from high cliffs, after her,
Phæbus, had made her vows to thee.

Superbam nimium venata gloriam,
Furiolo desiderio præcipitem dedit
Ab æro sese (copulo, cum Rex tibi (Phæbe) vota fecisset.

Others more curious in the search of Antiquities, do attribute the first doing thereof unto Cephalus for the Love of Pterela. It is said, Artemisia after the death of Mansilius, condemned by Darius a Youth of Abydos, in revenge thereof pulled forth his eyes notwithstanding still desperately loving, repaired to this Rock for a remedy: who perished in the fall, and had here her sepulture. It was a custom amongst the Leucadians in their yearly solemnities, as a propitiatory Sacrifice to Apollo, to throw some one from the top, condemned before for his offences, stuck with all sorts of feathers, and birds tyed about him, that his fall by their flutterings might become the less violent: received below by a number in Boats, and so thrust out of their confines. In this Island they have a City inhabited for the most part by Jews: received by Barjazes the second, at such time as they were expelled Spain by King Ferdinand.

Val de Compare, a little beyond presenteth her rocky Mountains, containing in circuit about fifty miles: now inhabited by Exiles and Pirates, once called Ithaca, so celebrated for the birth of Ulysses: who was not only Lord of that barren Island, but

At Ulysses duebat Cephalenenses magnanimos,
Qui Ithacam tenebant & Neritum frondosam:
Et Crocylia habitabant & Egilipam asperam,
Quique Zacynthum habitabant & qui Samum incolebant.
Quique Epirum habitabant & oppositam Continentem incolebant.
His quidem Ulysses imperabat Jovi consilio par.
Homer. Iliad. 2.

The valiant Cephalenians, and they
Who Egilipa, Same, Ithaca,
Woody Neritus, watry Crocyl,
Zacynthus and Epiru possess: who till
Th' oppos'd Continent, Ulysses led
In counsel like to Jove.

between this and the mouth of the Gulph of Lepanto (once named the Gulph of Corinth) lie certain little Islands, or rather great Rocks, now called Curzolari, heretofore Echinades: made famous by that memorable Sea-battle there obtained against the Turk by Don John of Austria, in the year 1571. and sung by a crowned Muse.

We failed close by Cephalenia, retaining that ancient name of Cephalus, the Son of Deionius: who banished Athena for the unfortunate slaughter of Procrus, repaired to Thebes, and accompanying Ambrosio in his Wars, made his abode in this Island; which was called formerly Teleboas and Melena. It is triangular in form, and 160 miles in circumference: the Mountains intermixed with profitable Vallies, and the Woods with Champain. Unwatered with Rivers; and poor in Fountains, but abounding with Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manna, Cheefe, Wool, Turkies, excellent Oyl, incomparable (though not long lasting) Muscadines, and Powder for the dying of Scarlet. This grows like a blifter on the leaf of the holy Oak a little shrub, yet producing Acorns, being gathered, they rub out of it a certain red dust, that converted after a while into worms, which they kill with Wine, when they begin to quicken. Amongst her many Harbours, Argostoli is the principal, capacious enough for a Navy. The Inhabitants of this Island are Greeians, and Venetians their Sovereigns. Having past through the Straights that divide this Island from the next (vulgarly called Canale del Zant) on the second of September we entered the Haven of Zacimbus, and saluted the Cattle with our Ordnance.

This Island (900 miles distant from Venice) so called of Zacimbus the Son of Dardanius, and at this day Zant, containeth in circuit not past 60 miles. On the South and South-East sides rocky and mountainous, but plain in the midst, and unpeakeably fruitful, producing the best Oyl of the World, and excellent strong Wines, both white and red, which they call Ribolla. But the chief Riches thereof consisteth in Currans, which draweth hither much Traffick (especially from England and Holland, for here they know not what to do with them) inasmuch that whereas before they were scarce able to free themselves from importunate famine, they now (besides their private gettings, amounting to 150000 Zecchins) do yearly pay unto St. Mark 48000 Dollars for Customs and other Duties. It is impossible that so little a portion of Earth, so employed, should be more beneficial; that mountainous part being barren, and the rest comprised within two or three not very ample Vallies, but those all over-husbanded like an entire Garden. They sow little Corn, as employing their grounds to better advantages, for which they sometimes suffer, being ready to starve, when the weather continueth for a season tempestuous, and that they cannot fetch their provision, which they have as well of Flesh as of Corn, from Morcia, being ten leagues distant. They have Salt-pits of their own, and store of fresh water, but little or no wood, though celebrated for the abundance thereof, by Homer and Virgil. Of which, his Aeneis, together with the Islands before mentioned.

Woody

Woody Zacimbus, Sea-girl, we describe,
Dulichium, Same, Neritus cliff bie.
From Ithacan rocks, Lertes land, we fled,
And curst the soil that dire Ulysses bred.
Amon the Cloud topt Leucata appear'd:
And high Apollo by the sailor fear'd.

Iam medio apparet fluctu nemorosa Zacynthos.
Dulichium, Sameque, & Neritos ardua faxa; Effugimus (scopulis Ithacae, Laertia regna.
Ex terram alticem (savi excuramus Ulyssis.
Mox & Leucata nimbofa cacumina montis,
Et formidatus nauci aperitur Apollo.
Virg. En. l. 3.

About the Island there are many Roads, but one only Harbour (if I may so name it, being undefended from the North-East and North-West winds) lying on the North-East side thereof, and opening towards Morcia: safe, and of a convenient receipt for Ships, respect we either the number or burden: and much frequented from all parts; who here commonly touch in their going forth, and in their returns. So that you shall not long stay for a passage, be you either bound for Venice, Constantinople, Tripoly, Alexandria, the Islands of the Mid-land Sea, or divers places of the Ocean. It is here a custom strictly observed (as also elsewhere within the Straits belonging to the Christians) not to suffer any to traffick, or come ashore, before they have a Prattick from the Signiors of Health: which will not be granted until forty days after their arrival, especially if the Ship come from Turkie, and bring not a Certificate, that the place from whence they came is free from the infection: if so, perchance their restraint may be shortned: during which time they have a Guardian set over them. They will not suffer a Letter to be delivered, if sealed with thread, before it be opened and aired. If such as come to speak with them do but touch one of the Ships, or sometimes but a Rope, they shall be forced to ascend, and remain there for the time limited; it being death to him that shall come ashore without licence. Notwithstanding, they at request will carry you to the Lazaretto (which is in the nature of a Pest-house) there to abide until the date be expired. But if any fall sick amongst them in the mean-season, their Prattick is accordingly prolonged. A great inconvenience to the Merchants, but at Venice intolerable: where when they have a Prattick, they are enforced to unlade at the Lazaretto. So under pretence of airing, their Goods are opened; their quantity, quality and condition known; redounding much to their detriments. But for that we came from Venice, we were freed from this mischief, and presently suffered to land.

The Town (being or giving a name to the Island, stretcheth along between the West-side of the Haven, and the foot of the Mountain; perhaps a mile in length, in breadth but narrow. The streets unplaced, the building low, by reason of the often Earthquakes whereunto this Island is miserably subject.

When through Earth hollows, the collected wind
Throngs from some part, nor ready vent can find
The vast caves it assails with horrid might:
Earth-quakes percuss'd men with the affright.
Then eminent ruins those proud structures threat
That most aspire: more safe to be left great.

Præterea ventus cum per loca subcava terre
Collectus parte ex una procumbit, & urget
Obnixus magnis speluncas viribus altas,
Incumbit tellus, quo venti prona premis vit.
Tum supra terram quæ sunt extructa domorum,
Ad cœlumque magna quanto sunt edita quæque,
Inclinata minix in eundem prolata patrem,
Prostrataque trabes impendunt ire paratæ.
Lucret. l. 6.

Two hapned during my short abode there, though of small importance. Although the fear of the Town be excessive hot, yet it is happily qualified by a North-East gale that bloweth from Sea most constantly about the midst of the day. Divers of their houses are shadowed with Vines that bear a certain great grape, which in regard of their shape were called Bumastus by the Greeians, the clusters being of a marvellous greatness. High above the Town, on the top of a steep round Mountain stands the Cattle, which overlooketh the Sea, and commandeth the Harbour: a little City of it self, ascended unto by a difficult passage, strong, and well stored with munition. Here a Garrison is kept; supplied by the Town-men upon each sudden summons. Upon the Wall a Watchman standeth continually, to discover the shipping that approacheth: who hangs out as many Flags as he descrieth Vessels; square it Ships, if Gallies pendants. Here the Governour of the Island hath his residence, whom they call the Providore, with two Configlieri, all Gentlemen of Venice (the consent of two prevailing against the third) together with the Chancellour (who are every third year removed) with other inferior Officers, where all Causes are adjudged, both Criminal and judicial. Over the Court of Justice there is written this Dutchion:

Hic locus odit, amat, punit, conservat, honorat,
Nequitiam, pacem, crimina, jura, probos.

This place doth hate, love, punish, keep, requite,
Voluminous Riot, Peace, Crimes, Laws, th' upright.

The Great Turk hath yearly a present of Falcons from the Governour (accompanied, as some say, with 1200 Zecchins) which he calleth a Tribute: it being in his power to distress them at his pleasure, by restraining the relief of Victuals which they have from Morea, and his adjoining Dominions. Whilst we were here, the Captain Bassa past by with 60 Gallies: who yearly about this time saileth in circuit, to receive Tribute, suppress Pirates, and to do some Exploit upon the Malsesia, Spaniards, and Florentines, with whom they are only in Hostility. Divers of their Gallies putting into the Haven, were courteously entertained: for the Venetians endeavour, as much as in them lies, to keep good quarters with the Turk; not only for the reason aforesaid (which perhaps might intend as far as their City: their Territories, though large and fruitful, too narrow to sustain so populous a State, if unrelieved from Turkey, and that their passage into the Mid-land Sea were interrupted) nor for the loss they should sustain by the cessation of Traffick with the Mahometans; but knowing him by dear experience too powerful an Adversary for them by Land, and though they are perhaps strong enough by Sea, yet, should they lose a Navy, their loss were unrecoverable, whereas the Turk within the space of a year is able to fet forth another.

The Inhabitants of this Land are in general, Grecians (of whom we will speak no more than concerns the particular customs of the place, reserving the rest to our relation of that people) in habit they imitate the Italians, but transcend them in their revenges, and infinitely less civil. They will threaten to kill a Merchant that will not buy their Commodities: and make more confidence to break a Fall, than commit a Murder. One of them at our being here, pursued a poor Sailer (an Englishman) for offering but to carry a little Bag of Currans aboard uncustomed, and killed him running up a pair of stairs for succour. He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad day-light. But cowardize is joined with their cruelty, who dare do nothing, but suddenly upon advantages, and are ever privately armed. Encouraged to villanies by the remissness of their Laws, for none will lay hands upon an offender, until fourteen days after that he be called to the Scale (an eminent place where one doth stand and publicly cite the offender) who in the mean time hath leisure to make his own peace, or else to absent himself. If then he appear not, they banish him, and propound a reward according to the greatness of the offence, to him that shall either kill or take him alive: and if it be done by one that is banished, his own banishment (the least reward) is released. The Labourers do go into the fields with Swords and Partizans, as if in an Enemies Country, bringing home their Wines and Oyls in Hogs-skins, the insides turn'd outward. It is a custom amongst them to invite certain men unto their Marriages, whom they call Compers. Every one of these do bestow a Ring, which the Priest doth put upon the Bride and Bridegrooms fingers, interchangeably shifting them; and so he doth the Garlands of their heads. Of these they are never jealous (an abuse in that kind reputed as detestable a crime, as if committed by a natural Brother) so that they lightly chuse those for their Compers, that have been formerly suspected too familiar. The Bridegroom entering the Church, sticks his Dagger in the door, held available against Inchantment. For here it is a common practice to bewitch them: made thereby impotent with their Wives, until the Charm be burnt, or otherwise consumed: inasmuch that oftentimes (as they say) the Mothers of the betrothed, by way of prevention do bewitch themselves, and again unloose them as soon as the Marriage is consummated. A practice whereof former times have been guilty: some manner perhaps delivered by Virgil in their Verses.

Necte tribus nodis ternos Amarylli colores,
Necte Amarylli modo, & Veneris, dic, vincula, necto.
Eclog. 8.

Three knots knit on three shreds of different dye,
Haste Amaryll, and say, Loves bonds I tie.

And in another following, the Inchantress having made two images of her Beloved, the one of Clay, the other of Wax, and throwing them into the fire, saith:

At

As his clay, and this wax, the fire the same

Limus ut hic durefcit, & hæc ut cera liquefcit.
Uno eodemque igni; sic nostro Daphnis amore.
Idem.

Harden, and melts; so be, in our loves flame.

The Nuptial sheets (as in some cases commanded by the Mosaic Law) are publicly shewn, and preserved by their presents as a testimony of their uncorrupted Virginities.

There be here two Bishops: one of the Greeks, and another of the Latines. The Greeks have divers Churches, the principal that of St. Nicholas (which giveth to the Haven a name, and not far removed) with a Monastery of Calicos; for so are their Monks called. On the other side of the Harbour, upon the top of the Promontory they have another far less, with a Chappel dedicated to the Virgin Mary, called Madonna del Scopo, reputed an Effectress of Miracles, and much invoked by Sea-faring men. As the Duke of Venice doth marry the Sea; so yearly doth this Bishop upon the Twelfth-day baptize it: although with less state, yet with no less Ceremony. The Venetians here (as in Candy) do joyntly celebrate the Grecian Festivals, either to gratify, or else to avoid occasions of tumult. As for the Roman Catholick Bishop, he hath his Cathedral Church, and residence within the Castle, where there is a Convent of Franciscans. And a mile and half off, in sight of the Town, on the side of a Mountain, they have another Monastery, called the Annunciata, where the Latines have their Burials: built in the year 1550. when under the ground there were found two Urns; one full of ashes, and the other of water, in an ancient Sepulchre. Upon a square stone that covered the Tomb, was engraven M. TUL. CICERO. I. AVE ET TU JEPHTA ANTONIA, and under the Urn which containeth the ashes, AVE MAR. TOL. It being supposed that Cicero was there buried: peremptorily affirmed by a Traveller then present, reporting withal that he saw this Epitaph:

Of Orators the Prince of Speech the Pride,
Tully, with his wife in this urn abide:
Tully, that of himself thus writ, O Rome
Blest, in that I thy Consul am become.

Ille Oratorum Princeps, & gloria linguae
Romanæ jacet hæc cum conjuge Tullius urna,
Tullius ille, inquam, de se qui scriperat olim
O fortunata natam me Consule Romanæ.
Adams Testenius in suo Trin.

The Jews have here a Synagogue (of whom there are not many) one having married an English Woman, and converted her to his Religion. They wear a blue Ribband about their Hats for a distinction. The foreign Merchants here resident are for the most part English, who by their frequent deaths do disprove the Air to be so salubrious as is reported, who have their purchased Interments in Gardens; neither suffered by Greeks nor Latines to be buried in Churches. If a stranger take here a draught of a Venetian, and a Venetian Ship be in Port, the Master thereof, upon a protestation, will enforce the stranger to unlodge, and serve his own turn therewith, if it be for his benefit. In this Island there are forty Villages.

On the 4. of September I embarked in another English Ship, called the Great Exchange: first bound for Chios, and then for Tripoli. With a prosperous wind we compassed a part of Morea, more famous by the name of Peloponnesus; shaped like a Plantane-leaf, and imbraced almost by the Corinthian and Saronian Arms of the Mediterranean. On the North it adjoineth to the rest of Greece by a narrow Isthmos; where stood that renowned City of Corinth, in hearing of both Seas, and having a Port unto either. Divers great Princes (as Demetrius, Julius Cæsar, Caligula, and Nero) with successful labour, have attempted to make that rocky straight a navigable passage, both to strengthen the fame, and that the Voyage into the Ægean Sea might thereby become more short, and less perilous. In succeeding time, a division was made by a strong Wall, thrown down by the Turkish Amurat, repaired in the year 1455. by the Venetians, in fifteen days space, by the hands of thirty thousand Pioneers, and again subdued by the Mahometans. This fruitful Country was divided into eight Provinces, Carinthia, Argia, Laconia, Messonia, Elio, Acchia, Sicyonia, and Arcadia, glorious throughout the World, for the Common-wealths of the Mycenians, Argives, Lacedæmonians, Sicyonians, Elians, Arcadians, Pylians, and Messenians; watered by the noble Rivers of Ajovus, Peneus, Alpheus (which receiveth Tribute of an hundred and forty Springs) Panijus, Enotus, and Inachus, so highly celebrated by the ancient Poets.

But

But now presenting nothing but ruines, in a great part desolate, it groaneth under the Turkish thraldom being governed by a Sanzak, who is under the Beglerbeg, or Grecia; and is to serve him a thousand Horfe whensoever he is called upon. The inhabitants are for the most part Grecians.

On the left hand left we two little Islands.

—Strophades Graio flant nomine diæ
Infule in Ionio magno, quos dira Celeno,
Harpayque colunt alix, Phineia postquam
Clausa domus, menisque meru liquere pitores.
Tristius hæc illis montibus, nec larior ulla
Pestes, & ira Deum Stygii sese exultis undis.
Virgine volucrum vultus, fœdissima ventris
Ingluvis, uncarque mænas, & pallida semper
Ora fame.

Virg. Æn. l. 3.

This Phineus was King of Arcadia, who bereft his Sons of their eyes by the instigation of their step-mother: for which offence the offended gods (as the story goes) deprived him of his, and sent these ravenous Harpies to afflict him. But the Argonauts being by him courteously entertained, sent Zetes and Calais, the winged issue of Boreas and Orithia, to chase them away. Who pursuing them to these Islands, were commanded by Min to desist from doing further violence to the Dogs of Jupiter; of whose return the Islands were so named. And what were these Harpies, but flatterers, delators, and the inexpressibly covetous? who abuse, devour, and pollute the fame of miserable Princes, blinded in the understanding. Zetes and Calais, are said to have wings by some, in regard of the fashion of their garments; by others, for their long and beautiful hair. But I rather think, for their wholesome advice, and expedite execution in freeing the State of those Monsters, called the Dogs of Jupiter; that is, infernal Furies, and Ministers of his Vengeance. Alphonsus King of Naples, was wont to say merrily, that the Harpies had let the Strophades to inhabit Rome: intimating thereby the avarice of the Clergy. These Rocks are at this day called the Strivally: where only live a few Greek Colliers, that receive their subsistence of alms from the neighbouring Islands. There is in one a Spring of fresh water, supposed to have his original in Peloponnesus, and so to pass under the Sea: in regard of a certain Tree over-shadowing a little Lake; the leaves thereof (or like unto those) being often found in this Fountain, there growing none of that kind in the Island.

We thrust between Cape Malta and Cerigo, about five miles distant: once called Porphyry of his excellent Porphyry; but better known by the name of Cythera. An Island consecrated unto Venus. In the Town, rising two furlongs up unto the Haven, stood her celebrated Temple (the most ancient that the Grecians had of that Goddess) and therein her Statue in complete Armour. Out of this it is said, that Paris made a Rape of Helen, or rather here first enjoyed her in his return from Sparta. The ruins are now to be seen, together with that of Uranian. The Island is sixty miles in compass: it hath divers Harbours; but those small and unsafe. And delightful soil: Inhabited by Grecians, and subject to the Venitians.

This is the first of the Ægean Sea: the largest arm of the Mediterranean, extending to the Hellepoint, and dividing Greece from the lesser Asia. So called of Ægeus, the Father of Theseus: who going to combat the Minotaur, was charged to turn the black Sails of his Ship into white, if he returned with Victory. Which forgetting to do, Ægeus thinking him slain, leapt into the Sea, from a Promontory where he expected his arrival. But Pliny saith, that it took that name of an Island, or rather a Rock, which lies between Chios and Tenedos: called Æx, in that formed like a Goat, now about to skip into the Surges: Strabo of Ægia a City of Euboea, or of Æga a Promontory of Boeotia, now vulgarly called the Archer. A Sea dangerous and troublesome to sail through, in regard of the multitude of Rocks and Islands, every where dispersed. Inasmuch, that a man is proverbially laid to sail in the Ægean Sea, that is, incumbered with difficulties. The Islands of this Sea were anciently divided into the Sporades and Cyclades. The Sporades are those that lie scattered before Crete, and along the Coast of Asia: the Cyclades, so called, in that they lie in a Circle.

Amongst the rest of the last named, we sailed by Delos (now Diles) hem'd with sharp Rocks: even from the Reign of Saturn of special veneration. Once a floating Island.

In Greek, called Strophades; within the great Ionian Sea: the dire Celeno sits,
Which whether Harpies; since that chae'd they were
From Phineus house, and left his board for fear.
More horrid monsters, nor worse plagues than those.
Or wrath of Gods, from Stygian flood ere rose.
Like fowls with Virgins faces, purging ill
Their filthy panes: arm'd with talons ill,
And ever pale with famine.

Which kind Jove (shifting to and fro) did tie
To Cyros and high-brow'd Myconie
For culture fix'd; and bold winds to defie.

Quam pius Arcitenens, oras & littora circum
Errantem Mycone cœli Giaroque revinxit;
Immo camp; colli dedit, & continere vento.
Virg. Æn. l. 3.

For the Fable goes, that when all the Earth at the intreaty of Juno, had abjured the Receipt of Latona, Delos at the same time under the water was crecked aloft, and by Jupiter fixed to entertain her; then named Delos, which signifies apparent.

Nurse of Latona's brood: whom Jove while-ere Bad in Ægean surges to appear.
I hold thee happy in Apollon's birth:
And that Diana calls thee her own earth.

Latona partus matris, quam Jupiter olim
In maris Ægei sistere iussit aquis.
Te voco felicem quod Phœbum peperis, & quod
Solam te patriam clana vocat.
Alphæus.

But the truth is: it was said to be unstable, in that miserably shaken with Earthquakes, until freed thereof by a Petition made to Apollo: who enjoying certain Sacrifices, commanded, that thenceforth they should neither bury their dead there, nor suffer a Dog to enter the Island: (so that the Delians had their interments in Rhena, a little desert Island four furlongs distant) and called Delos; for that where in other places his Oracles were obscure and ambiguous, they here were manifest and certain. On a Plain within the environing Rocks, stood the City, so honoured for the Temples of Apollo and Latona, under the Mountain Cynthus: of which Apollo was called Cynthius and Diana Cynthia: as Delius and Delia of the Island, made more famous by the neighbouring Cyclades, that like a Ring did environ it: and yearly feild multitudes of men, and Troops of Virgins to celebrate his Solemnities with herds of Sacrifices; as thus in reputation, to increase in wealth through the subversion of Corinth by the Romans. The Merchants removing thither, invited by the immunities of the Temple and convenience of the place, it lying in the passage between Greece and Asia, and frequented by so great a concourse of people.

Upon the re-edifying of Corinth, it was held by the Athenians, and flourished both in her Rites and Traffick, until laid waste by Mithridates. From that time continuing poor, and when Oracles ceased, utterly forsaken. Which doubtless was upon the passion of our Saviour. For Plutarch reports from the mouth of one Epithetes, who had been his School-master, that he embarking for Italy, and one evening becalmed before the Faxe (two little Islands that lie between Coreyra and Lemadia) they suddenly heard a voice from the shore (most of the Passengers being yet awake) calling to one Thamus a Pilot, by birth an Egyptian, who till the third call would not answer. Then (quoth the voice) when thou art come to the Palodes, proclaim it aloud, that the great Pan is dead. All in the Ship that heard this, were amazed. When drawing near to the aforesaid place, Thamus standing on the poupe of the Ship, did utter what formerly commanded; forthwith there was heard a great lamentation, accompanied with groans and shrieks. This coming to the knowledge of Tiberius Cesar, he sent for Thamus, who avouched the truth thereof. Which declared the death of Christ (the great Shepherd) and subjection of Satan, who now had no longer power to abuse the illuminated World with his impostures. The ruins of Apollo's Temple are here yet to be seen, affording fair Pillars of Marble to such as will fetch them, and other stones of price, both in their nature and for their workmanship: the whole Island being now un-inhabited.

Three days after our embarkment (as quick a passage as ever was heard of) we arrived at Sio, a famous Island formerly called Chios, which signifieth white; of Chione a Nymph,

—Who rich in beauty
A thousand suiters pleas'd—

—que diffinis formæ
Mille precis placuit
Ovid. Metam. l. 3.

and therefore so named. Others say of the Snow, that sometimes covers those Mountains. Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit, extending from South unto North: the North and West quarters extraordinary hilly. In the midst of the Island is the Mountain Arvis (now Amisia) producing the best Greek Wines, so praised by the ancient.

But

Ex multo in primis hilarans convivia Baccho,
Ante focum, si frigis erit; si melleis in umbra:
Vina novum tandem calathis Arvisia nectar.
Virg. Eclog. 5.

But the Lentisk Tree, which is well-nigh only proper to Sio, doth give it the greatest renown and endowment. They grow at the South-end of the Island, and on the leisurely ascending Hills that neighbour the shore. In height not much exceeding a man, leaved like a Cervice, and bearing a red berry, but changing into black as it ripeneth. Of this Tree thus written an old Poet;

Jam vero semper viridis, semperque gravata
Lentiscus, triplicis folia est grandæcere formæ:
Ter fruges fundens, tria tempora monstrat arandi.
Cic. de Divin. & vet. Poet.

The Lentisk, ever green, and ever great,
With grateful fruit, three difficult fruits doth bear,
Three barquets yields, in thrice dropt in one year.

Of equal value with a Venice
Zecchin.

And that with no less diligence than Vines; otherwise they will afford but a little Maltich, which yearly yields to the Inhabitants eighteen thousand Sultanies. In the beginning of August lanch they the rind, from whence the Maltich distilleth, until the end of September, at which time they gather it. None suffered to come amongst them during the interim, it being death to have but a pound of new Maltich found in their houses. The Wood thereof is excellent for Tooth-picks, so commended of old:

Lentiscum melius; sed si tibi frondea cuspis
Deficit dentis penna levare potest.
Mart. l. 14. Ep. 22.

Lentisk excels: if Tooth-picks of the Lentisk
Be wanting, of a Quill then make a Tooth pick.

By reason of these Trees they have the best Honey of the World, which intermingled with water, is not much inferior in relish to the costly Sherbets of Constantinople: The Island produceth Corn and Oyl in indifferent plenty. Some Silk they make, and some Cottons here grow, but short in worth unto those of Smyrna. It hath also Quarries of excellent Marble: and a certain green Earth, like the rust of Brass, which the Turks call Terra Chia; but not that so reputed of by the ancient Physicians. The Coast, especially towards the South, is set with small Watch-towers, which with smoke by day, and fire by night, do give knowledge unto one another (and so to the Up-land) of suspected enemies. The environing Sea being free from concealed Rocks, and consequently from peril.

On the East-side of the Island, four leagues distant from the Main of Asia, from that part which was formerly called Tonia, stands the City of Sio: having a secure Haven (though daily decaying) yet with something a dangerous entrance, flung out on the North side by the Sea-ruined Wall of the Mole, incroaching near the Diamond, which stands on the other side of the mouth; (so called of the shape, rising out of the Sea, and supporting a Lanthorn, erected by the Genoveses) inasmuch that Ships of the greatest size do anchor in the Channel: but ours thrust in, when going ashore, I was friendly entertained of the English Consul. The Town stretcheth along the bottom of the Haven: back'd on the West with a rocky Mountain: the building mean, the streets no larger than Alleys. Upon the Cattle-hill there is a Bannia, which little declines from the state of a Temple; paved with fair Tables of Marble, and supported with Columns, containing several Rooms, one hotter than another, with Conduits of hot Water, and natural Fountains. On the North side of the City stands the Cattle ample double walled, and environed with a deep Ditch: manned and inhabited by Turks, and well stored with munition. This not many years since was suddenly scaled in a night by the Florentines: who choking the Artillery, and driving the Turks into a corner, were now almost Masters thereof: when a violent storm of wind, or rather of fear, enforced their Companions to Sea, and them to a composition; which was, to depart with Ensigns displayed. But the Governour having gotten them into his power, caused their heads to be struck off: and to be piled in Mortar on the Cattle-wall, whereas yet they remain, but not un-revenged. For the Captain Bassa upon his coming strangled the perfidious Governour: either for dishonouring the Turk in his breach of promise, or for his negligence in being so surprised. Since when, a Watch-word every minute of the night goeth about the Walls, to testify their vigilancy. Their Orchards are here enriched with excellent fruits: among the rest, with Oranges, Lemons, Citrons, Pomegranates, and Figs, so much esteemed by the Romans for their tartness.

The

The Chian figs, which Scitia to me sent,
Taste like old wine: they wine and salt present.

Chia feni similis Baccho, quam Scitia mense:
Ipsa mecum secum potare, & ipsa saltem.
Mart. l. 13. Epig. 23.

Upon these Fig-trees there hangs a kind of unfavoury fig: out of whose corruption certain small worms are ingendred, which by biting the other (as they say) procure them to ripen. Partridges here are an ordinary food, whereof they have an incredible number, greater than ours, and differing in hew: the beak and feet red, the Plumage ash-colour. Many of them are kept tame, these feeding abroad all day, at night upon a call return unto their several owners.

The Chios were first a free people, being a Common-wealth of themselves, and maintaining a Navy of fourscore Ships (not destitute of diversity of Harbours) where-by they became the Lords of the Seas. Their City is one of those that contended for the birth of Homer (stamping his figure on their Coin) although not mentioned in that Distichon.

Seven Cities strive for Homers birth, Smyrna, Chios, Rhodes, Colophon, Salamis, Athens, and Argos.

Septem Urbes certant de stirpe insignis Homeri.
Smyrna, Rhodos, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athene.

They also boast of his Sepulchre about the Pibæan Promontory; not far from whence, in a Grove of Palms stood the Temple of Apollo. They at this day shew a place not past a quarter of a mile from the Town, not far from the Sea, now by the Islanders called Eritheia, (I know not upon what ground) where they say, that Sybil prophesied. The Rock there riseth aloft, ascended by stairs on the West-side, cut plain on the top, and hallowed with benches about, like the seats of a Theatre. In the midst a ruined Chair, supported with defaced Lyons, all of the same stone, which yet declares the skill of the Workman. Here, they say, the fate, and gave Oracles. But the reliques in my conceit doth disprove the report. For there are the shape of Legs annexed to the Chair: the remains of some Image, perhaps erected in her honour, though I never read of a Chian Sybil, nor of an Eritheia in this Island; yet stood there a Town so named on the opposite shore; why rather not some Idol of the Paganæ? In times past they were for the most part served by Slaves. Inasmuch that when Philip the Son of Demetrius besieged the City, he proclaimed freedom to such as would rebel, and their Mistresses to Wives, for reward of their Treasons. Which contrarily provoked their loyal fury, and the Womens indignations, that they jointly endeavored with hands and encouragements, in such sort as repulsed the besiegers. At length they became Subjects to the Romans, and then to the Greek Emperour: Andronicus Palæologus following, or rather selling the same to the Justinians, a Family of Genoa. After it grew tributary to the Turks: yet was it governed and possessed by the Genoveses, who paid for their immunities the annual sum of fourteen thousand Ducats. But Solyman the Magnificent, picking a quarrel with the Governour, for a suspected correspondence with the great Master of Mitsa, during those Wars and discovery of his designs, having besides neglected accustomed presents with the payment of two years tribute, sent Pial the Captain Bassa to seize on the Island, who on Easter-day in the year 1566, presenting himself before Sio with fourscore Gallies, so terrified the Inhabitants, that before they were summoned, they quietly surrendered both it and themselves to his disposal. The Governour, together with the principal Families, intending to depart for Italy, he sent unto Constantinople, and suffered the common people to stay or remove at their liking. So that the whole Island is now governed by Turks, and defiled with their superstitious: yet have the Christians their Churches, and un-reproved exercise of Religion. Besides impositions upon the Land, and upon Commodities arising from thence, the great Turk receives yearly for every Christian above the age of sixteen, two hundred Alpers, but the Husbandmen are exempted until Marriage. The Inhabitants for the most part are Turks and Grecians; those living in command, and loosely, the other husbanding the Earth, and exceeding them infinitely in number. They are in a manner relaxed of their thralldom, in that unfeasible of it: well meriting the name of merry Greeks, when their leisure will tolerate. Never Sunday, or Holy-day passes without some public meeting, or other-where intermixed with Women, they dance out the day, and with full crown'd cups enliven their jollity: not seldom passing into Asia, and the adjoining Islands, unto such Assemblies. The streets do almost all the night long partake of their Mulkick. And whereas those of Zam do go armed into the field to bring home their Vintage, these bring home theirs with Songs and Rejoycings. Most differ but little from the Genoise in habit, of whom there are many; and though they have corrupted one another's language, yet retain their Religion distinctly. The Women celebrated of old for their beauties, yet carry that fame: I will not say undervalued. They have their head tricked with Taffels and Flowers. The bodies of their Gowns exceed not their Arm-pits: from whence the skirts flow loosely, fringed below; the upper shorter than the nearer; of Damasks or Stuffs less costly, according to their condition. The Merchants pay here for custom but three in the hundred; and in their return but one and an half, if they have paid custom at Constantinople.

and

Smyrna is not far distant from Chios: but by reason of the doubling of a certain Cape which stretcheth to the North, requiring two contrary winds, it is by Sea a longer and more troublesome journey. The Bay doth take the name of the City, at the end whereof it is seated. Overthrown by the Lydians, re-edified by Antigonus, and after by Lysimachus. The most beautiful part thereof possessed the Hill: but the greater the Plain, adjacent to the Sea. Amongst other goodly Temples they had one consecrated to Homer, (for the Smyrnians will have him a Citizen of theirs) containing his honourable Image. For less beholding was he to Pythagoras, who reports that he saw him hanging in Hell, for so fabling of the gods. A City not so reputable for her Schools of Learning and admirable Library, as in the title of one of the Primitive Churches of Asia. But now violated by the Mohometans, her beauty is turned to deformity, her knowledge into barbarism, her Religion into impiety. Frequent notwithstanding it is by foreign Merchants: Natolia affording great flocks of Chamolets and Grogerams, made about Angra, and a part brought hither, before such time as the Goats (whose hair they pull, white, long, and soft) were destroyed by the late Rebels, confuting for the most part of the expelled Inhabitants of burned Towns; who having lost all that they had, knew not better how to recover their losses, than by preying upon others, and so joined with their undoers. Led by Calender Ogly and Zid Arath; and grown to so fearful a head, that the Great Turk (some say) had once a thought to have forsaken the Imperial City, they being fifty thousand, and delirious of Artillery. After foiled by Moras Bassa the great Vizier, who for that service (but chiefly for the overthrow of Jamballat the Bassa of Alippo, and natural Lord of the rich Valley of Achiller) was called by him his Father and Deliverer. They besieged this City, and were by certain English Ships, that lay in the Road, unfriendly saluted. In the end they burnt a part thereof, and took a ransom for sparing the rest. But the principal Commodity of Smyrna is Cotton-wool, which there groweth in great quantity. With the seeds thereof they do sow their field as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but rough as the Beans: the head round and bearded, in size and shape of a Medlar, hard as a stone, which ripening breaks, and is delivered of a white soft Bombast intermixed with seeds, which they separate with an instrument. You would think it strange, that so small a shell should contain such a quantity; but admire, if you saw them flive it in their Ships, enforcing a Sack as big as a Wool-pack into a room at the first too narrow for your arm, when extended by their instruments; so that often they make the very Decks to stretch therewith.

Our Ship (ere to depart from Tripolis) being bound for this place, where her business would detain her for some fifteen days, my desire laid hold on the interim (informed, that although I came short of this passage, I should light upon another not long after) to see the City of Constantinople. Taking with me a Greek that could speak a little broken English, for my Interpreter, on the twentieth of November I did put my self into a Bark, Armado of Simo, a little Island hard by the Rhodes (the Patron a Greek, as the rest) being laden with Sponges. That night we came to an Anchor under the South-West side of Mitylen.

This Island, not past seven miles distant from the Continent of Phrygia, containeth eightscore and eight miles in circuit. The South and West parts mountainous and barren, the rest level and fruitful, producing excellent Corn, Et Lesbica farina, nive candidior. Horat.

And Lesbian flour, more white than snow.

(whereof the Turks make their Trachana and Boubort, a certain hodgepodge of sundry ingredients) and Wines, compared by Athenens and Ambrosia of principal request at Constantinople, yet not so ready as the ordinary.

Here

Here underneath some shady vine;
Full cups of burlesque Lesbian wine
Will we quaff freely: nor yet shall Thyonian Liber with Mars brawl.

Hic innocentis pocula Lesbii
Ducis sub umbras, nec semel ejus.
Cum Marte confundet Thyoneus Prelia.

Hor. l. 3. Ode 17.

A virtue feigned to have been given it by Bacchus. The Jews have taught them how to help the colour (of it self but pallid) with Barries of Ebalum. Sheep and Cattel are here bred and sustained in great plenty: Horses, although low of stature, yet strong and courageous. This Country was first inhabited by the Pelasgians under the conduct of Zambus the son of Triopus, after that by Macarius, who followed by certain Ionians, and people of sundry nations, here planted himself. Through the bounty of the soil he acquired much riches: and by his justice and humanity the Empery of the neighbouring Islands. Then Lesbus the son of Sapibus, (so advised by an Oracle) sailing hither with his family, espoused Mabymna the daughter of Macarius. Of these the Island was called Pelasgia, Macaria, and Lesbos. As Mabymna had a City which retained her name, so had her sister Mitylene: which gave, and doth at this day give a name to the Island; seated on a Peninsula which regardeth the main land, strong by nature, and fortified by Art, adorned heretofore with magnificent buildings, and numbered amongst the Paradises of the earth for temperate air and delightful situation.

Others will praise bright Rhodes, fair Mitylene,
Ephefus, and Corinth, which two seas confine.

Laudantur alii claram Rhodon, aut Mitylenen,
Aut Ephefus, bimarive Corinthi moenia.
Hor. l. 1. Ode 7.

On either side it enjoyeth a Haven; that on the South convenient for Gallies; the other (inclosed with Rocks, and profound) for Ships of good burthen.

A number of celebrated wits have in their birth made this country happy; as Pittacus, one of the seven Sages, Sappho, and Alcaeus,

Sad Sappho's Eolian strings
Of harder hearted Virgins sing;
Alcaeus in a higher key
On golden lyre, of ills at Sea
In fights sustain'd, and Wars stern ire's
The attentive ghosts do both admire,
Worthy of sacred silence—

—Aetolis fidibus querentem
Sappho, puellis de popularibus;
Et te sonantem plenius aures
Alcae plectro, dura navis,
Dura fugae mala, dura belli.
Utramque laceris digna silentio
Mirantur umbrae dicere—
Hor. l. 1. Ode 13.

succeeding Orpheus in the excellency of lyrical Poetrie. Whereupon the fable is grounded, that when cut in pieces by the Ciconian women,

Hebrus had head and harp. Whilst born along
The harp sounds something sadly: the dead tongue
Sighs out sad ditties: the banks sympathize
That bound the River in their sad repitice.
Now born to Sea, from countries stream they drive
And at Methymnian Lesbos shore arrive.

—Caput Hebre, lyramque
Excepit: (& mirum) medio dum labitur amne,
Flebile nescio quid queritur lyra, flebile lingua
Murmurat exanimis, respondent flebile ripae.
Jamque mare invectæ, flumen populare relinquunt
Et Methymniae potius litoris Lesbi.
Ovid. l. 11.

It is said also that the Nightingales of this country sing more sweetly than elsewhere. On their Coin they stamped the figure of Sappho. Nor less honoured they Alcaeus: a bitter invigher against the rage of Tyrants that then oppr'd this country: Amongst whom the forenamed Pittacus might seem one; but his purpose was contrary: who usurped the sovereignty of all, that by suppressing the inferior Tyrants he might restore the people to their liberty. From whence came also Arion, Ibocrophastus, and others. This Island was given by Calo Joannes the Greek Emperor, together with his sister, unto Franciscus Catalanus a Genoese, in the year 1355 in recompence of his valour and service done him in the Turkish wars. In whose posterity it long continued, they governing the same with great justice: linked in alliance with the Emperors of Trapezond, and other Grecian Princes. But when the Turk had possessed himself of all the continuing Nations, they became his tributaries: paying for the same the annual sum of 4000 Ducats. Dominicus Catalanus, having surprised his elder brother, and delivered him to Baptista a Genoese, partaker of the conspiracy, and after having murdered him, invested himself in the sovereignty. The last and wicked Prince of that family;

C

For

For Mahomet the Great, in the year 1462: incensed against him, as well for harbouring the Pirates of Italy and Spain, who sold to him their slaves, and gave him part of their booty, as for the execrable murder of his Brother, passing into Asia with not above two thousand Tanizaries (but followed by an hundred sail of Ships & Gallies) came by land to Pogidium, over against Lesbos: whither transported he over-ran the whole Island, and besieged the Prince in the City of Mitylen, who after seven and twenty days siege surrendered the same, together with all the strong Forts of the Island, upon condition that he should give him some other Country equal unto it in value: whereupon by solemn oath he obliged himself. But the faithless Turk possessor of his prey, commanded the Prince to remove to Constantinople; puts a strong Garrison into the City; and distinguished the Inhabitants according to their degrees, the better sort he leaveth away with him, giveth away those of the middle condition, (afterwards sold as they do Sheep in Markets) and leaveth be hind the dregs of the people to their own arbitrement, as dangerous, and unprofitable: reserving to himself eight hundred boys and virgins, excelling the rest both in birth and beauty. But deserv'd vengeance would not so relinquish the fratricide; cast not long after into prison upon this occasion. A youth that had escaped out of the great Turk Seraglio, was by him entertained at Mitylen, whom he had converted to the Christian Religion, and after no withstanding most wickedly contaminated. Un-mindful of him in this tempest of calamities, he had left him behind him: when after, being presented to the Emperour for his admirable beauty, he was known, and the Prince clapt up as his invigil. Now every day expecting the Executioner, for his safety he abjured his Saviour: whereupon circumcised and velted by the Great Turk, he was set at liberty. Too dear a purchase for so short a breath: imprisoned again soon after, and finally strangled. This Island in such sort subjected to the Turkish obedience, at this day to continueth, inhabited for the most part by Grecians. All that is left of the City of Mitylen, which deserveth observation, is the Castle, exceeding strong, and manned by an able Garrison, and the Arsenal for Gallies: whereof divers are here kept continually to scour these Seas, infested greatly by Pirates.

On the one and twentieth of September the winds grew contrary: and Seas (though not rough) too rough to be brooked by so small a Vessel, no bigger, and like in proportion to a Graves-end Tilt-boat; yet rowing under the shelter of the land, we cutted the Gulf of Calone: they hoping to have found some purchase about a Ship cast there away but a little before, divers of them leapt into the Sea, and diving unto the bottom stayed there so long, as if it had been their habitable element. And without question they exceed all others in that faculty: trained thence to from their childhood: and he the excellentest amongst them that can best perform it: Inasmuch, that although worth nothing, he shall be proffered in marriage the best endowed and most beautiful virgin of their Island. For they generally get their living by these sponges, gathered from the sides of Rocks about the bottom of the Straights; sometimes fifteen fathom under water. A happy people that live according to nature; and want not much, in that they covet but little. Their apparel no other than linen breeches; over that a smock clove girt unto them with a towel; putting on sometimes when they go ashore, long sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton. Yet their backs need not envy their bellies: Bisket, Olives, Garlic, and Onions being their principal sustenance. Sometimes for change they will scale the Rocks for Samper, and search the bottom of the less deep Seas for a certain little fish (if I may so call it) shaped like a burr and named by the Italians, Riccio. Their ordinary drink being water: yet once a day they will warm their bloods with a draught of wine, contented as well with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth do pamper their voracities.

Dicite quam parvo liceat propuere vitam;
Et quantum natura petat: non erigit agros
Nobilis ignoto diffusum Consule sacculus.
Non auro myrrhæque bibunt; sed gurgere puro
Vita redit satis est populi flavique Cereleque.
Lucan. l. 3.

Learn with how little, life may be sustain'd
And how much nature would. Not generous wines
Of unknown age avail where health declines.
In Gold nor Myrrh drink they: but the pure flood Preserves them, bread and is suffice for food.

When they will they work, and sleep when they are weary: the bank that they row upon, their couches (as ours was the poop:) hardened by use against heat and cold, which day and night interchangeably inflicteth. So cheerful in poverty, that they will dance whilst their legs will bear them, and sing till they grow hoarse: secured from the cares and fears that accompany riches.

O safe condition of mean estate! a good
Given by the Gods, as yet not understood.

O vix tu faculas
Pauperis, arguistique laris! O munera pondum
Intellecta Deum! Lucan. l. 5.

Upon the two and twentieth of September, the winds continuing contrary, we but a little shortened our journey, desiring a small Sail that made towards us, and thinking them to be Pirates, we rowed back by the shore with all possible speed. In the evening we returned to the place that we fled from; when going a-shore, one attired like a woman, lay groveling on the sand, whilst the rest slept about him in a ring, muttering certain words, which they would make me believe were prevalent charms to alter the weather to their purpose. On the three and twentieth we continued weather-bound, removing after it grew dark to another anchorage: a custom they held, lest observed by day from Sea or shore, they might by night be surprized. We lay in a little Bay, and under a cliff, where not one of us but had his sleep interrupted by fearful dreams, he that watched affirming that he had seen the Devil; so that in a great dillany we put from shore about mid-night: But whether it proceeded from the nature of the vaporous place, or that infested by some spirit, I leave to decide. It is reported of a little rocky Island hard by, named formerly Æx, and sacred unto Neptune (whereof we have spoken something already) that none could sleep upon it for being disturbed with apparitions.

On the four and twentieth the Sea grew calm, and we proceeded on our voyage; towards evening we went ashore on the firm of Asia for fresh water, and came that night unto Tenedos.

In sight of Troy, an Isle of wealth and fame
While Priam in this state abode:
Now but a Bay; for Ships a faithless road.

Est in conspectu Tenedos notissima fama
Insula, dives opum, Priami dum regna manebant;
Nunc tantum sinus, & talis malefida carinis.
Virg. Æn. l. 2.

And so it is at this day: to which adjoineth the Town so named, with a Castle of no great importance. This Island containeth in circuit not above ten miles, removed but five from the Sigeon shore; rising into a round Mountain towards the North, the rest level, and producing exceeding strong wines, which declare the Inhabitants to be Grecians. First, it was called Leucophrya, then Tenedos, of Tenes the son of Cymus, who reigned in Colone a City of Troas. It is said, that accused by his step-mother (in revenge of her repulses) for proffering that which the incestuously fought, his father put him into a Chest, and threw him into the Sea: being born by a tempest unto this Island, and so admirably delivered; where from that time forward he reigned. And because a Mulician was of the conspiracy with his mother, he made a Law, that no Mulician should enter the Temple which he had built, and consecrated to Apollo Smintheus then Protector of this Island, as appeareth by the invocation of Chryseis.

O Smintheus, thou that bear'st the silver bow;
That Chrysa guard'st, with Cilla most divine,
And Tenedos, to my dire curse incline.

Audi me argeptreum habens arcum qui Chryseis
undique tuetur,
Cillanque valde divinam, Tenedoque fortiter
imperas
Smintheu ——— Hom. Il. l. 1.

But certain it is, that Tenes came hither, and peopled it, being desolate before. In the wars of Troy he was slain by Achilles. And for that he was a just Prince, full of worth and magnanimity, they honoured him after his death with his sacrifices and a Temple; wherein it was not lawful so much as to mention Achilles.

With the morning they renewed their labour, rowing along the chalky shore of the lesser Phrygia. Now against Cape Tanizary (desirous to see those celebrated fields where once stood Ilium the glory of Asia, that hath adorned to rarest wits so plentiful an argument) with much importunity and promise of reward (it being a matter of danger) I got them to sit me ashore. When accompanied with two or three of them, we ascended the not high Promontory, level above, and crown'd with a ruinous City, whose imperfect walls do shew to the Sea their antiquity. Within are more spacious Vaults, and ample Cisterns for the receipt of water. The foundation hereof should seem to have been laid by Constantine the Great, who intending to remove the seat of his Empire, began here to build: which upon a new resolution he erected at Byzantium. This is that famous Promontory of Sigeum honoured with the Sepulchre of Achilles, which Alexander (visiting it in his Asian expedition) covered with flowers, and ran naked about it, as then the custom was in Funerals: sacrificing to the Ghost of his kinsman, whom he reputed most happy, that had such a Trumpet as Homer to re-found his virtues.

The first that reigned in this Country was Teucer; begot (as they feign) by the River Scamander on the Nymph Ida. Him succeeded Dardanus the son of Jupiter, and Elcira the daughter of Atlas, and wife to Coritus King of Hetruria; who lying Idly for the death of his brother Jafus, first planted in Samosbracia, and afterward removing hither, espoused Batea the daughter of Teucer, and in her right possess'd this Kingdom: Whole off-spring is thus related by Aeneas.

Dardanus quidem primum genuit nubi cogus Jupiter,
Conditusq; Dardanius. Quoniam nondum Ilium sacrum
In campo conditum erat oppidum diversarum linguarum ho-Sed adhuc loca sub montana habitabant fontoe Ida. (mini.
Dardanus vero genuit Erichthonium Regem.
Qui cum ditissimus erat mortalium omnium.
Troem autem Erichthonius Trojana Regem.
Ex Troe vero tres filii inculpati nati sunt,
Iuliques, Affaracusque, & divinus Ganymedes,
Qui sane pulcherrimus fuit mortalium hominum.
Ilius vero genuit filium præclarum Laomedonem.
Laomedon vero Tithonium genuit Priamumque
Lampumque Cleitumque; Hicetaonemque ramum Martis.
Affaracus autem Capym genuit: hic Anchilem genuit filium, Sed me Anchiles.—

Hom. Il. l. 20.

Ilius was the first that after the Flood adventured to inhabit the Plains. For before men dwelt on the tops of Mountains: and by little and little defended as their terrors forsook them, changing their conditions with the places: and by how much nearer the Sea, by so much the more civil. In the Plain beyond us (for we durst not straggle farther from the shore) we beheld where once flood Ilium by him founded: called Troy promiscuously of Tros. Afterward fained to have been walled about by Neptune and Phobus in the days of Laomedon. Who hath not heard of this glorious City, the former taking, the ten years war, and latter final subversion? which befell according to Ensebius, in the year of the world 2784, and second of Abdons government of Israel.

Scaliger refers unto the year of 2768.

— Si magna fuit censura vitique
Perque decem potuit tantum dare sanguinis annos,
Nunc humiles veteres tantummodo Troja ruinas,
Et pro divitis tumulos ostendit avorum.
Outid. Met. l. 5.

But these not at this day more than conjecturally extant. They that favour not the inventions of Virgil, report that Aeneas removed not from hence: but succeeded in this Kingdom: which for a long time after remained in his posterity: highly honoured by the Grecians themselves for his wisdom, valour, and piety, (he not consenting to the rape of Helena) who forbore to damnify both his person and fortunes. Whereupon suspected it was, that he betrayed the City. But the prophecy that Homer makes of him in the person of Neptune, then ready to be done to death by Achilles, in my opinion is a testimony for Virgil:

Sed cur hic nunc innocens dolores patitur
In cassum ob alienas culpas? grata autem semper
Munera diis exhibet, qui cælum latum habitant.
Sed agite, non saltem ipsum a morte subducamus,
Ne forte Saturnides irascatur si Achilles
Hunc interimit: fatalis enim est evitare,
Ut ne sine prole genus & proles extinctum pereat
Dardanum, quem Saturnides præ omnibus dilexit liberis
Qui in se nati sunt mulieribus mortalibus
Jam enim Priami genus odit Saturnus,
Nunc autem iam sternere Trojam imperabit
Et nati mortuum qui deuincens nati curat.
Hom. Il. l. 20.

Cloud chafing Jove did Dardanius beget,
Who built Dardania: Sacred Ilium yea
Decks not the lower Plains possess'd by men
Of different tongues; they populated then
The foot of fount-full Ida. Joves son begot
King Erichthonius, richer liv'd there not.
Rich Erichthonius, Tros the Trojan King.
From Tros three un-impeach'd sons did Ilius, Affaricus, divine Ganymed, (Spring.
The fairest youth that ever mortal bred,
Ilius begot far-fam'd Laomedon,
He Tithon, Priam, brave Hicetaon,
Lampus, and Cleitius. Great Affaricus
Got Carys, he Anchiles, and be, us.

So rich, so powerful, that so proudly stood,
That could for ten years space spend so much blood:
Now prostrate, only her old ruins show,
And Tombs that famous Ancestors inclose.

Why criminals, suffers he for others crimes?
Who gods with grateful gifts so many times
Haith feasted. Come, now free we him from death:
Left if through wounds Achilles force his breath,
Jove chance to storm. Fate doth his scape intend,
For fear the stock of Dardanus should end:
Whom Jove (who now doth Priams race detect)
Of all begot on mortal dames liv'd best.
Aeneas, and his childrens children shall
The Trojans rule, and re-erect their Fall.

there

there being no mention made of any of his Progeny that here reigned after him. North of this Promontory is that of Rhatenm, celebrated for the Sepulchre of Ajax, and his statue: by Antonius transported into Egypt, and restored unto the Rhatensi by Augustus. Panjanis reports from the mouths of the Æolians, who re-peopled re-edified Ilium, how that the Armor of Achilles (the cause of his madnes, and self-slaughter) was, after the shipwreck of Ulysses, thrown up by the Sea upon the basis of his monument.

Which given to Seas by Tempsts Neptune caughts
And Jupiter, to the true deserver brought.

Iustior arripuit Neptunus in equora iactum
Naufragio, ut dominum posset adire suum.
Æliat. Emb.

*Twixt these two Capes there lyeth a spacious Valley. Near Sigeum was the station for the Grecian Navy: but nearer Rhatenm the River Simois (now called Simore) dischargeth it self into the Hellefont. This draweth his birth from the top of Ida, the highest mountain of Phrygia, lying Eastward from hence; and resembled, for that it hath many feet, unto a certain rough worm, which is called Scolopendra: approaching the Sea not far thort of Mitylen, and stretching North-ward to the lesser Myfia. Famous for the judgement of Paris, and pregnancy in Fountains: from whence descend four Rivers of principal repute, Ægæus and Granicus (made memorable by Alexander's victory,) these turn their streams to the North: Simois, and Scamander, that regard the Ægæum. Two not far disjoining vallies there are that stretch to each other, and joyn in an ample plain (the theatre of those so renowned bickerments) where flood the ancient Ilium, if not fortunate, not inglorious, nor un-revenged.

Old Troy by Greeks twice sackt: twice new Greece rued
Her conquering Ancestors. First when subdued
By Rome's bold Trojan progeny: and now
When forc'd through Turkish infelence to bow.

Bis vetus eversum est Argivis Ilium armis,
Bis nova victores Græcia luget avos.
Maxima Trojanois relictum Roma nepotes:
Atq; iterum imperium cum modo Turcus habet. I. C. Scal.

Through these fore-named vallies glide Simois, and divine Scamander: so named faith Homer by men; but Xanthus by celestials. Xanthus, in that the sheep that flock thereof had their fleeces converted into yellow, according to Aristotle: Scamander, of Scamander, who therein drowned himself. Of this River they made a Deity, and honoured it with Sacrifices. It was an ancient custom amongst the Trojan Virgins, for such as were forthwith to be married, to bathe themselves therein, and with these words to invoke the River:

Come, O Scamander, pluck my Virgin flower.

Sume, O Scamander, virginitatem meam!

So that on a time Cimon an Athenian (for the Athenians were mixed with the Trojans) being in love with Callirhoe a Lady of principal parentage, now betrothed to another, crowned his head with Reeds, and hid himself in the Sedges adjoining: when upon her singing of that used verse, he leapt out of the covert, and replied most willing, by constraint defouled her: upon which occasion, that solemnity was abrogated. Nearer the Sea it joincth with Simois: there it should seem where Achilles was so engaged by the waters;

Nor shrunk Scamander, but inrag'd the more
A climbing billow high in air up-bore.
And with an out-cry silver Simois thus Exhorteth: Come, dear brother, now let us
Our forces join, &c.

Neque Scamander remisit suam vim, sed adhuc magis
Succensuit Pelidæ: extulit autem andam aqua,
In altum sublatas, Simoentem ut hortabatur clamans:
Chare frater, rubur viri ambo saltem
Golibeamus, &c.
Hom. Il. l. 21.

and proceeding, do make certain Lakes and Marishes. These Rivers, though now poor in streams, are not yet so contemptible, as made by Belonius: who perhaps mistaketh others for them, (there being sundry rivulets that descend from the mountains) as by a likelihood he hath done the life of the ancient Troy. For the ruins that are now so perspicuous, and by him related, do stand four miles South-west from the fore-said place, described by the Poets, and determined of by the Geographers: seated on a hanging hill, and too near the naval station to afford a field for such dispersed encounters, such long pursuits, interception of scouts, (then when the Trojans had pitched nearer the Navy) and executed stratagems, as is declared to have hapned between the Sea and the City. These reliques do sufficiently declare the greatness of the latter, and not a little the excellency. The walls (as Bellonius, but more largely, describeth it) consisting of great square stone, hard, black, and spongy, in divers places yet standing; supported on the inside with pillars about two yards distant one from another, and garnished once with many now ruined Towers: containing a confusion of thrown-down buildings, with ample Cisterns for the receipt of rain; it being seated on a sandy foil, and altogether destitute of Fountains. Foundations here are of a Christian Temple; and two Towers of Marble, that have better resisted the fury of time: the one on the top of a hill, and the other nearer the Sea in the valley. From the wall of the City another extendeth (supported with Buttresses, partly standing, and partly thrown down) well-nigh unto Ida: and then turning is said to reach to the Gulph of Saetia, about twenty miles distant. Half a mile off, and West of these ruins, oppoling Tenedos, are the hot-water-bathes, heretofore adorned, and neighboured with magnificent building: the way thither inclosed as it were with Sepulchres of Marble, many of the like being about the City, both of Greeks and Latins, as appeareth by the several characters. Two Baths there be; the one choaked with rubbidge, the other yet in use, though under a simple coverture. But now the ruins bear not altogether that form, lessened daily by the Turks, who carried the pillars and stones unto Constantinople to adorn the buildings of the great Baſſies, as they now do from Cyzicus. This notable remainder of so noble a City, was once a small Village of the Ilions. For the Ilions, after the destruction of that famous Ilium, often shifting the seat of the new, here fixt it at last, as is said, by the advice of an Oracle; containing one only contemptible Temple dedicated to Minerva, at such time as Alexander came thither: who then offered up his shield, and took down another (that which he used in his fights) enriching the Temple with gifts, and honouring the Town with his name; exempting it from tribute, and determining upon his return to erect in it a sumptuous Temple, to institute sacred games, and to make it a great City. But Alexander dying, Lyſimachus took upon him that care: who immured it with a wall containing forty furlongs in circuit; yet suffered to retain the name of Alexandria. After it became a Colony, and an University of the Romans, of no mean reputation. Fimbria the Quæstor, having in a sedition slain the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bitunia, and making himself Captain of the Roman Army, the Citizens refusing to receive him, as a Robber and a Rebel, besieged this City, and in eleven days took it, who boasted that he in eleven days had done that, which Agamemnon with five hundred sail of ships, and the whole Greek nation, could hardly accomplish in ten years. To whom an Italian answered, That they wanted an Hektor to defend them. Pieces of ruins throughout these Plains lye every where scattered.

Returning again to our Barque, hard by, on the left hand left we Imbrios, now called Lembros, once sacred to Mercury, and not far beyond Lemnos; famous for the fabulous fall of Vulcan.

Me quoque de celo pede jecit Jupiter olim
Contra illum auxilium misero ut mihi ferre pararem.
Ait ego cum celo Phœboque cadente ferebar
In Lemnum ut cecidi; vix est vis ulla relicta.
Hom. II. l. i.

'Gainst Jove once making head, he caught me by
The foot, and flung me from the profound skie:
All day I was in falling: and at night
On Lemnos fell: life had forsok me quite.

Whereupon, and no marvel, he ever after halted. The Greeks there now inhabiting do relate — (Quid non Græcia mendax Audet in historia?) —

— (What dares not lying Greece
In Histories infer?) — that he brake his thigh with a fall from a Horse on the side of a hill, which at this day beareth his name. The earth in that place thereupon receiving those excellent virtues of curing of wounds, stopping of fluxes, expelling poysons, &c. now called Terra Sigillata, in that sealed; and there only gathered. In regard of the quality of this earth which is hot, the Island was consecrated to Vulcan, who signifieth fire. For the Antient expresseth under these Fables, as well the nature of things, as manners of persons. And now, so heretofore in the digging thereof they used sundry ceremonies: ceremony which giveth repute unto things in themselves but trivial. It was wont to be gathered by the Priests of Venus, who amongst other rites, did mingle the earth with the blood of a Goat (printing the little pellets whereinto divided, with his form) which was sacrificed unto her. The neglect of this her honour by the women of the Island, was the cause, as they fable, of their goat-like favour: so that loathed by their husbands (who shortly after making wars upon the Ibracians, had espoused their Captives) and burning with a womanly spleen, in one night they massacred them all, together with their Concubines; after murdering their own Children, left they in time to come should revenge the blood of their Fathers: and so extinguished the whole generation. This Hill lyeth South of the ruins of that antient Hephæſtia which gave a name unto Vulcan, and about three flight-shots removed. Between which standeth Sorica, a little Chappel frequented by the Greek Colerios upon the sixth of August: where they begin their Orisons, and from thence ascend the Mountain to open the vein from whence they produce it, which they do with great preparations and solemnities, accompanied with the principal Turks of the Island. That which covereth it, being removed by the labour of well-nigh fifty Pioneers: the Priests take out as much as the Cady doth think for that year sufficient, (left the price should abate by reason of the abundance) to whom they deliver it: and then close it up in such sort, as the place where they dig'd, is not to be discerned. The vein discovered, this precious earth, as they say, doth arise like the casting up of worms: and that only during a part of that day: so that it is to be supposed rather, that they gather as much as the flame will afford them. Certain bags thereof are sent to the great Turk: the rest they sell, (of which I have seen many cups at Constantinople: but that which is sold to the Merchants is made into little pellets, and sealed with the Turkish character. The ceremonies in the gathering hereof, were first inducted by the Venicians.

of

And now we entred the Helleſpont.

A. Munt Ida. D. Abydos. G. Zembenit. K. Cape Janicary.
B. Tenedos. E. Sestos. H. Helleſpont. L. Ruins of Alexandria.
C. Sea of old Troy. F. Mitylene. I. Callipolis. M. Mouth of Simois and Scamander.

so called of Helle the daughter of Athamas King of Thebes, and sister of Phryxus: who flying the fratricides of their Step-mother Ino, was drowned therein. Bounded on the left hand with the Ibracian Chersonese (vulgarly called St. George's arm) a peninsula pointed to the South-west: whereon stood the Sepulcher of Hecuba, called Cynossena, which signifieth a Dog: fained to have been metamorphosed into one, in regard of her impatience. She in the division of the Trojan Captives, contemned, decided, and avoided of all, fell to the hated share of Ulyſſes: from to free her self from shame and captivity, she leapt into the Helleſpont. But Dionys Cretensis faith; that distracted with her miseries, and execrating the enemy, she was slain by them, and buried in the aforesaid Promontory. On the right hand the Helleſpont is confined with the lesser Phrygia. It divideth Europe from Asia, in sundry places, not above a mile broad, broad, in length about forty, (now called the Chafel of Constantinople) and having a current that setteth into Ægeum: a trade-wind blowing either up or down, which when contrary to the stream, doth exceedingly incense it, the Mountains on each side are clothed with Pines, from which much pitch is extracted.

Three Leagues above the entrance, and at the narrowest of this Straight stand Sestos and Abydos, opposite to each other: formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncompassionate Surges, and sung by Museus. Here Xerxes, whose populous Army drank Rivers dry, and made Mountains circum-navigable, is said to have pass'd over into Greece upon a bridge of Boats. Whereof Lucan.

—Fama canit tumidum super eggora Xerxes
Confluxisse vias, multum cum pontibus ausus
Europamque Afiam, Sestonque admovit Abydo:
Inceffique fretum rapidi super Hellespontis,
Non Eurum, zephyrumque timens
Longæque tremum super aquora turres.
Lucan. l. 2.

Fame sings how Xerxes upon Neptune's Bine
Erected ways: that by a Bridge durst join Europe to Asia; Sestos to Abydos:
Who on the fretful Hellespontus goes,
Not dreading Zephyrus, nor Eurus raves;
The high Towers tremble on the wrathful Waves.

Which when broken by Tempests, he caus'd the Sea to be beaten (as if sensible) with three hundred stripes, and fetters to be thrown therein; forbidding any to sacrifice unto Neptune. Nor sped the winds better.

In Corum atque Eurum solius favere flagellis
Barbarus, Æolio nunquam hoc in carcere passus.
Juv. Sat. 10.

Who scourge'd the East & North-east winds: till then Never so serv'd; not in Æolian den.

O the dog-like rage and arrogant folly of Idiotcs advanced to Empire!

Sed qualis rediit? Nempe una cruentis Fluctibus, & tarda per densa cadavera prora.
idem.

But how return'd? Dismaid, through blood-stain'd
With one Boat, stopp'd by floating carcasses. [Scat

Abydos stands in Asia, which the Milesians first founded by the permission of Cyger King of Lydia, unto whom all the country was subject. Taken by the Turks in the reign of Orchaneis, successor unto Ottoman, through the treason of the Governours daughter: who, like another Scylla, bewitched with the person of Abdurachman, and his valour, often seen from the towers of the Castle, as he approached near the wall, threw down a Letter tyed unto a stone, wherein she manifested her affections and promised the delivery of the Castle, if he would persuade the General to remove his siege, and return himself in the dead of the night, and follow her directions. The defendants over-joy'd at the enemies departure, drink freely, and sleep soundly, when Abdurachman coming with a selected crew was let in by his attending Lover, who conducted him to the Gates, where he slew the drowfie Guard, and set them open to his followers, furnishing the Captain in his bed, whom he carried away prisoner, and fortified the place with Mahometans. Sestos stands in Europe, though never great yet strongly built, and once the principal City of the Chersonesus: afterward decayed, a Castle was built in the room thereof. Abydos is seated upon a low level: and Sestos on the side of a Mountain, yet descending to the Sea: both bordering the fame with their Castles; whereof the former is four-square, the other triangular. Terrible towards the Sea in regard of the number and huge proportion of the Ordnance plant'd level with the water. Moreover, kept by strong Garrisons: yet nothing less than invincible, by reason of the over-weeping Mountains that back the one, and slender fortification of the other to land-ward. These at this day are vulgarly called the Castles. All Ships are suffered to enter, that by their multitude and appointment do threaten no Invasion; but not to return without search and permission: of which we shall speak in the proceeds of our Journal. A little beyond we pass by the ruins of a Castle, which the Turkish Carnasals and Gallies still sailing by, salute with their Ordnance, it being the first Fort by them taken in Europe, who call it Zembenick. Surprised by Solyman, the eldest son of the forefaid Orchaneis: who passing the Hellspont by night, conducted by a Greek, whom he had taken before, by means of a dung-hill which surmounted the wall, with facility entered it; the Inhabitants not dreaming that they could have pass'd into Europe, (who had made upon the sudden certain little Boats for that purpose, yet more generally said to be transported by the Gemefor for a ducate a head) being dispersed in their Vineyards, and treading their Corn, which they accustom to do by night in these Countries. The blotted Grecians (a preface of their approaching ruine) being so far from endeavouring a recovery, that they jested at the loss, and said that they had but taken a Hogs-head, alluding to the name, called dachylion. That night we came to Callipolis, some twenty miles distant: and thrust Cairo into a little Haven North of the Town; but only capable of small Vessels.

of

Callipolis is a City of Chersonesus, seated at the bottom of a Bay: so shallow, that Ships do there usually anchor, as throughout the whole Hellspont. Some conjecture that it was called Callipolis of the Gauls that over-ran those Countries, under the conduct of Brennus a Britain (if our Chronicles err not) and brother to Belinus. But in that a Greek surname, it seemeth to deny the receipt thereof from a Foreigner. Pausanias maketh mention of one Callirolis, the younger son of Calceobius, who had sent Echopolis his elder brother to assist Meleager in chase of the Bore of Calydon. Echopolis there slain, and the news thereof coming to Callipolis, in a rage he ran into the Temple, and threw the wood from the Altar, his Father then sacrificing to Apollo: who thinking that it had been in contempt of his sacrifice, struck out his brains with a fire-brand, and so deprived himself of posterity. Callipolis maketh a fair shew afar off; but entered, is nothing less than it promised: a part thereof possessing the shore, and the rest the rising of the Mountain: unwall'd, and without either Citadel or Fortrefs. Along the shore there are divers dry stations for Gallies. On the South-side of the City, in a little Plain, are sundry round Hills: the Sepulchres, as they say, of certain Thracian Kings; for such was the ancient custom of burial. The Country above, is champion and not barren; but rarely inhabited. The infinite number of Turkish Graves by the high-way sides, and adjoining Hills, do shew it to have been plentifully inhabited by them, and of a long continuance; it being the first City that they took in Europe, under the leading of the forefaid Solyman, in the year 1338. Here is a Ferry for Transportation into Asia. Greeks and Jews, together with the Turks do inhabit the Town, and are admitted their Churches and Synagogues. Here also is a Monastery of Romish Friars, of the Order of St. Augustine: one of them being at this time (not dwelling in the Convent) the Frank Consul; whose office is to dispatch and discharge the dues of all Christian Ships, not Subject to the Grand Signior, and admitted free Trading, below at the Castles. To this house I repaired, with hope of some refreshment after my wearisome voyage: but he then from home, I was forced to return to my water-bed; there being no Inns for entertainment throughout in-hospital Turkie: yet is this Town well furnished with all sorts of provision. What is here sold by the Greeks, you may agree for a price: but the Turks will receive your money, and give you a quantity for it, according to their own arbitrement; but truly enough, and rather exceeding, than short of your expectation. For two or three Alpers (whereof twenty are near upon a shilling) a Butcher will cut off as much Mutton (for they divide it not into joints) as will well satisfy three though hungry: which they carry to the Cooks, who make no more ado, but slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prog of Iron, and hang it in a Furnace. Decided, and flouted at by divers of the bolder people, at night we returned to our Bark. And departing the next morning, were forth-with met with a contrary wind, which drove us to the shelter of a Rock not far from the Town: where we abode all that day, and the night ensuing: they opening and washing part of their Sponges: which laid on the shore, by the bulk you would have thought to have been a fraught for a Pinnace, which swived into Sacks, when wet, were belowed under the side benches and cross banks of their little Vessels.

On the seven and twentieth of September, before day, we left the shore, and after while entered the Propontick Sea: confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bythynia on the other: joyning to the Euxine Sea by the Straights of Bosphorus, as it doth to the Ægean by the Hellspont. It is a hundred and fifty Furlongs in length, and almost of like Latitude: so that those which sail in the midst, may delay from all parts the envolving land, called now Mar de Marmora by the Italians of Marmora, a little, but high Island, which standeth against the mouth of the Hellspont, and in sight of Callipolis: at whose South side that night we arrived.

This Island was anciently called Proconessus, the Country of Aristeus, a famous Poet, that flourished in the days of Cæsus, and a notable Juggler: who dying (or so seeming to do) his body could be no where found by his friends that were assembled to bury him. It had two Cities of that name, the Old and the New: the former built by the builders of Abydos. Celebrated for excellent Quarries of white Marble; and therefore now called Momora: where a number of poor Christian slaves do hew stones daily for that magnificent Mosque which is now a building at Constantinople by this

this

this Sultan. It hath a small Village towards the North, with a Haven peopled by Greeks. The soil apt for Vines, and not destitute of Corn : affording also pasture for Goats, whereof they have plenty. Incredible numbers of Partridges, like to those of Sio, here run on the Rocks, and fly chiding about the Vineyards. Having climbed the Mountains, steep towards the Sea, we got to the Town, and bought us some victuals. At night we returned to our Boat which lay in an obscure Bay, where they spent the next day in waiting the relidue of their Sponges : whilst I and my Interpreter spent our time on the top of the Mountain in the Vineyards : not well pleased with this their delay, now more affecting their ease than when without the Hellspont : being rid of that fear (for no Pirate dare venture to come within the Catils) which had quickned their expedition. In the evening we descended ; where we found the Patron lying on his back upon a Rock, all dropping wet : speechless, and struggling with death to our seeming. The Greeks together by the ears, every one with his fellow : some in the Boat, and some upon the shore. Amongst the rest there was a blind man, who had married a young wife that would not let him lie with her, and thereupon had undertaken this journey to complain unto the Patriarch. He hearing his brother cry out at the receipt of a blow ; guided to the place by the noise, and thinking with his staff to have struck the striker, laid it on with such a force, that meeting with nothing but air, and not able to recover himself, he fell into the Sea : and with much difficulty was preserved from drowning. The clamor increased with their contentions : and anon the Patron starting up, as if of a sudden restored to life ; like a mad man skips into the Boat, and drawing a Turkish Cymbiter, beginneth to lay about him (thinking that his Vessel had been surpris'd by Pirates,) when they all leapt into the Sea ; and diving under the water like so many Dive-dappers, ascended without the reach of his fury. Leaping ashore, he pursues my Greek, whom fear had made too nimble for him ; mounting a steep cliff, which at another time he could have hardly ascended. Then turning upon me only armed with stones, as God would have it, he stumbled by the way ; and there lay like a stone for two hours together : that which had made them so quarrelsome being now the peace-maker ; having cast the fetters of sleep upon their disseniments. For it being proclaimed death to bring wine unto Constantinople, and they loth to pour such good liquor into the Sea, had made their bellies the overcharged vessels. When the Patron awaked, and was informed by my Greek how he had used me, and withal of my resolution (which was rather to retire unto the Town, and there expect a passage, than to commit my safety unto such people) he came unto me, and kissed me, as did the rest of his companions, (a testimony amongst them of good will and fidelity) and so enforced me aboard. The winds the next day blew fresh and favourable. That night we came to anchor a little below the seven Towers : and betimes in the morning arrived at the Custom-house. Then crossing the Haven, I landed a Galata, and so ascended the vines of Pera : where by Sir Thomas Glover, Lord Ambassador for the Kings, I was freely entertained : abiding in his house almost for the space of four months. Of whom without ingratitude and detraction, I cannot but make an honourable mention.

Pausanias King of Sparta, that is said to have built, did but re-edifice this City : then called Byzantium of Byz the founder, and taken by assault but a little before from the Persians. A while after he sendeth for Cleoneice the daughter of an honourable Byzantine, with purpose to have abused her : who vainly waiting tears and entreaties, desires that for modesties sake the light might be extinguished. The time delayed by her lingering address, he falleth asleep : and suddenly awaked with her ominous stumbling, then coming unto him, starts up, misdoubting some treason, and strikes her to the heart with a dagger. Haunted by her ghost, or through the terrors of his guilt to perswaded, ever founding in his ears this saying ;

Tu cole justitiam, teque arq.ue alios manet ulcor.
Plin. in Mar.

Be just, Revenge attends on thee and others :

he was forced to repair unto Heraclea, where the spirits of the deceased, by certain fets and infernal sacrifices were accustomed to be raised. Which performed, the ghost of Cleoneice appeared, and told him that soon after his arrival at Sparta his trouble should end. Which did with his life, mewed up by the Ephori in the Temple of Minerva, (where he had taken sanctuary) : condemned by them for the intended betraying of his Country unto Xerxes. Byzantium from that time forward grew famous, and held an equal repute amongst the principal Cities ; three years besieged e're taken by the Emperour Severus, and at last made Sovereign of the rest by the Emperour

Constantine.

Constantinople. Who detesting the ascent of the Capitol, the Senate, and people, amplified the fame, called it Constantinople, and made it the seat of his Empire : enduring it with the privileges of Rome ; the Citizens of one being free of the other, and capable of the dignities of either. But the chief cause of his remove was, that by being near, and drawing into those parts his principal forces, the Empire towards the East might be the better defended, then greatly annoyed by the Persians. The divine determination having so appointed or permitted, that way may be given to the spiritual usurper, and to restore to the Western world their temporal freedom, by withdrawing of their Legions, in the absence of the Emperours, by the succeeding division, and consequent subversion of that Empire. He intended first to have built at Chalcedon, on the other side of the Thracian Bosphorus ; in view of this, and a little below it, whereof the Megarians were the builders called blind by the Oracle, for that, first arriving at that place they made choice of the worst and less profitable site : the fish (especially the Tunny, bred in the Lake of Maeotis, which exceedingly enriched the Byzantines) that came out of the Euxine Sea, being driven to the contrary shore by the stream, and frighted by the whiteness of the Cliffs from the other. And even at this day fish of sundry kinds, at sundry times, in incredible multitudes, are forced by the aforesaid current into the Haven : when many entering far in, and meeting with the fish, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies, and are taken. It was reported, that when the workmen began to lay the platform at Chalcedon, how certain Eagles conveyed their lines to the other side of the Straight, and let them fall right over Byzantium : whereupon the Emperour altered his determination, and built his City whereas now it standeth, as if appointed to do so by the Deity. Finished it was in the eleventh of May, in the year 331. and consecrated to the Blessed Virgin. Rome he bereft of her ornaments to adorn it : fetching from thence in one year more antiques, than twenty Emperours had brought thither before in an hundred. Amongst the rest that huge Obelisk of Thuban Marble, called Placaton by the Greeks, (formerly brought out of Egypte) and erected it in the Forum, with a brazen Statue of antique and Dedalian work man-ship, set upon the top of a Column, and called by his name (but supposed to be the counterfeit of Apollo translated from Ilium) thrown down by a violent wind in the reign of Alexis. This place was also beautified with the Trojan Palladium ; an Image of Pallas three Cubits high : in the right hand holding a Spear, in the left, a Spindle, and appearing as if it walked ; which he gave, as they feign unto Dardanius in dowry with his daughter Chryseis. By Iliu removed unto Ilium, it was told them by an Oracle, that as long as it included the fame, the City should remain in-expugnable. Whereupon it was placed in the most secret part of the Temple, and another made like it, exhibited to the view : stoln after from thence by Ulysses and Diomedes. But the true one (together with the Trojan Penates) was delivered by Sycas to Aeneas, who carried it with him into Italy : removed from Alba longa to Rome, and placed in the Temple of Vesta. Which let accidentally on fire, Lucius Metellus being then High-priest, did reduce with the loss of his eyes.

This City by destiny appointed, and by nature seated for Sovereignty, was first the seat of the Roman Emperours, then of the Greek, as now it is of the Turkish : built by Constantine the son of Helena, and lost by Constantine the son of another Helena (a Gregory then Bishop, whose first Bishop was Gregory) to Mahomet the second, in the year 1453. with the slaughter of her people, and destruction of her magnificent Structures. The like may be observed of the Roman Emperours ; whose first was Augustus, and whose last was Angustulus. So have they a Prophecy that Mahomet shall lose it.

To powerful Asia oppos'd, in Europe seated :
Of old the bound to both, and now the Head.
Fortune remov'd with the Imperial seat :
And with new Fortunes this grew far more great.
Who fore'd, enlarg'd ; what now Earth's shoulders makes
The basis of her height : even proud Rome quakes.
Not old, a Strumpet whom new lusts disjame :
That estimas it no crime not to shame.
Arise thou fiercest, strike, kill, thine's the day :
Laws only add to Arms : rule and obey.

Europæ impoſita hæc Afizque objecta potenti :
Limes utriusq. olim, nunc utriusq. caput.
Translato imperio pariter fortuna recellit :
Crevit, & auſpicis maxima facta novis :
Ausit qui caput : ſed nunc ſervicibus oris
Inſummet : ipſa etiam Roma ſuperba tremic.
Non vetus illa : novo, meretricis fed perdidit luxu :
Quæ nullum crimen nolle pudere putat.
Surge ferox, quæ, cæde : tua eſt victoria : tantum
Mile armis leges : accipie, daque jugum.

J. C. Scelig.

It stands on a Cape of Land near the entrance of the Bosphorus. In form triangular: on the East-side washed with the same, and on the North-side with the Haven,

- | | |
|---|---|
| A. The Thracian Bosphorus and way to the Black Sea. | E. The Haven of Constantinople. |
| B. The Bay of Imit. | F. Point of Fondackee. |
| C. The high land over Bursa. | G. Point between Scutari and Chalcedon. |
| D. The entrance into Propontis. | H. The Maiden-Tower. |

adjoining on the West to the Continent. Walled with brick and stone, intermixed orderly: having four and twenty Gates and Posterns; whereof five do regard the Land, and nineteen the Water; being about thirteen miles in circumference. Than this there is hardly in nature a more delicate object, if beheld from the Sea or adjoining Mountains: the lofty and beautiful Cypress Trees so intermixed with the buildings, that it seemeth to present a City in a Wood to the pleased beholders. Whose seven aspiring heads (for on so many hills and no more, they say it is seated) are most of them crowned with magnificent Mosques, all of white Marble, round in form, and coupled above; being finished on the top with gilded spires, that reflect the beams they receive with a marvellous splendor: some having two, some four, some six adjoining Turrets, exceeding high, and exceeding slender: tarraft aloft on the out-side like the main top of a Ship and that in several places equally distant. From whence the Talismanis with elated voices (for they use no bells) do congregate the people, pronouncing the Arabick sentence, La Illa Illalla Mubemet reful Allah: viz. There is but one God, and Mahomet his Prophet. No Mosque can have more than one of these Turrets, if not built by an Emperor. But that of Santa Sophia, once a Christian Temple, (twice burnt, and happily, in that so sumptuously re-edified by the Emperor Justinian) exceedeth not only the rest, by whose pattern they were framed, but all other Fabricks whatsoever throughout the whole Universe. A long labour it were to describe it exactly: and having done, my eyes that have seen it would but condemn my defective relation. The principal part thereof riseth in an oval: surrounded with Pillars, admirable for their proportion, matter, and work-man-ship. Over those others; thorough which ample Galleries, curiously paved, and arched above, have their prospect into the Temple: dignified with the presence of Christian Emperors at the time of Divine Service; ascended by them on horse-back. The Roof compact and adorned with Mosaic painting. An antique kind of work, composed of little square pieces of Marble; gilded and coloured according to the place that they are to assume in the figure or ground: which set together, as if imbossed, present an unexpressible stateliness, and are of a marvellous durance: numbred by Pancirollus amongst things things that are lost: but divers in Italy at this day excel in that kind: yet make the particles of clay, gilt, and coloured before they be neiled by the fire. The rest of the Church, though of another proportion, doth joyn to this with a certain harmony. The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent Marble: vaulted underneath, and containing large Cisterns, replenished with water from an Aqueduct. Before the entrance there is a goodly Portico; where the Christians that visit it upon curiosity as well as the Turks, do leave their shoes before they do enter. Within on the left hand there is a Pillar covered with Copper, ever sweating, (I know not why, unless in being passed thorow by some Conduit) which the Turks wipe off with their handkerchers: through a vain superstition perswaded, that it is of sacred and sovereign vertue. The doors are curiously cut through, and plated: the Wood of one of them feigned to be of the Ark of Noe, and therefore left bare in some places to be kissed by the devouter people. Evagrius, that lived a thousand years since, affirmeth, this Temple to have been from East unto West, two hundred and threescore feet long, and in height one hundred and fourscore: and Antonius Monastinus, that in the days of Barjaces, it contained at once six and thirty thousand Turks. Perhaps the ancient Fabrick then standing entire; whereof this now remaining was little more than the Chancel. Better to be believed than Bellonius, a modern eye-witnes, who reports that the doors thereof are in number equal to the days of the year: whereas if it hath five, it hath more by one than by me was discerned. Mahomet the Great, upon the taking of the City, threw down the Altars, defaced the Images, (of admirable Workmanship, and inhite in number) converting it into a Mosque. To every one of these principal Mosques belong publick Egnars, Hospitals, with Lodgings for Santons and Ecclesiastical persons, being endowed with competent Revenues. The inferiour Mosques are built for the most part square: many pent-hous'd with open Galleries, where they accustom to pray at times extraordinary: there being in all (comprehending Pera, Scutari, and the buildings that border the Bosphorus) about the number of eight thousand.

But this of Sophia, is almost every other Friday frequented by the Sultan: being near unto the fore-front of his Seraglio, which possesseth the extremest point of the North-East Angle, where formerly stood the ancient Byzantium: divided from the rest of the City by a lofty Wall, containing three miles in circuit; and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypresses intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, all variety of Fruit-trees, and what not rare? Luxury being the steward, and the Treasure unexhaustible. The proud Palace of the Tyrant doth open to the South: having a lofty Gate-house without Lights on the outside, and engraven with Arabick Characters, set forth with Gold and Azure, all of white Marble. This leadeth into a spacious Court three hundred yards long, and above half as wide. On the left side thereof, stands the Round of an ancient Chappel, containing the Arms that were taken from the Grecians in the subversion of this City; and at the far end of his Court a second Gate, hung with Shields and Cymiters, doth lead into another full of tall Cypress-trees, less large, yet not by much than the former. The Cloisters about it leaded above, and paved with stone, the Roof supported with Columns of Marble, having Copper Chapiers and Bases. On the left hand the Divano is kept, where the Bassas of the Port do administer Justice; on that side conjoined with humble buildings. Beyond which Court on the right hand there is a street of Kitchens: and on the left is the Stable, large enough for five hundred Horses; where there is now to be seen a Mule so admirably streak'd, and dappled with white and black, and in such due proportion, as if a Painter had done it, not to imitate nature, but to please the eye, and express his curiosity. Out of this second Court there is a passage into the third, not by Christians ordinarily to be entred: surrounded with the Royal Buildings, which though perhaps they come short of the Italian, for contrivement and fineness of Workmanship; yet not in costly curiosities, matter, and amplitude. Between the East-wall (which also serveth for a Wall to the City) and the water, a sort of terrible Ordinance are planted, which threaten destruction to such as by Sea shall attempt a violent entry or prohibited passage. And without on the North-side stands the Sultans Cabinet in form of a sumptuous Summer-house; having a private message made for the time of waxed linen from his Seraglio: where he often solaceth himself, with the various objects of the Heaven; and from thence takes Barge to pass unto the delightful places of the adjoining Asia. This Palace, howsoever enlarged by the Ottomans, was first erected by Justinus.

Sontque in eo Templo (si licet dicere) tot portæ quot in anno dies. Os.
fero. lib. 1.
cap. 76.

Qua resonante feroo fludus cava lictora tundunt;
Et duplici Pontus nomine incindit humum;
Inclutus uxori celebranda palatia struxit
Rex Sophia; multus quam decoravit honos.
Quam bene (Roma potens) tua gloria conficit, unde
Europæ atque Afiz fertilis arva patent.
Agathius.

Where floods encountering hollow shores rebound
And straightned Seas of two names cut the ground;
The King for his Sophia did erect
A stately Palace, sumptuously deckt.
How well (great Rome) did thy glory raise,
Which Asia's, and Europe's Fields survey!

and named it Sophia of the Emperess.

Now next to these Ottoman Mausolea's do require their regard, built all of white Marble, round in form, coupled on the top, and having stately Porches. Within each is the Tomb of a several Sultan, with the Tombs of his children, that either have died before him, or have after been strangled by their tyrannical brethren, according to the Turkish piety. The Tombs are not longer nor higher than fitting the included bodies, each of one stone higher at the head than feet, and compass'd above, without other ornaments than covers of green, and Turbans laid upon the upper ends. At the four corners of those of the Sultans, there stand four Tapers of Wax, as big as a thigh, but not lighted. The floors of the Monuments are spread with Carpets, and some there are that do continually live therein; performing such duties of prayers and lamentations as agree to their customs, at certain times besprinkled with the tears of their off-spring.

The South-east angle of this City is taken up by the seven Towers, called anciently Janiculas, employed as the Tower of London, for a Store-house of the Sultans Treasure and Munition, being also a Prison for capital offenders. We omit to speak of the great mens Scragliars, that of the women belonging to the deceased Emperours; and that of the Virgins, the Alberges of Janizaries; the several Seminaries of Spachies and Giumogians; the Besiktans (where inner forts of commodities are sold) Hospitals; Markets of men and women, &c. since hereafter we are to treat of most of their Orders, the buildings themselves not meriting a particular description, converting our discourse to those few remainders of many Antiquities, whereof the Aqueduct made by the Emperor Valentinian, and retaining his name, doth principally challenge remembrance: this hath his heads near to the black Sea, not far from a Village called Domuzdere, of the abundance of wild Hogs thereabout, the place being woody and Mountainous; where many Springs are gathered together, and at sundry places do jointly fall into great round Cisterns, from thence conveyed to conjoin with others (amongst which, as supposed, is the Brook Cydarium) led sometimes under the earth, now along the level, then upon mighty Arches over profound Vallies, from hill to hill, for the space well-nigh of thirty miles, until arriving at the City, and surmounting the same, it falleth at length as from a head-long cataract, into an ample Cistern, supported with near two hundred pillars of Marble, and is from thence by Conduits conducted unto their publick uses. This was repaired by Solyman the Great, Grandfather of this now reigning Achmet, whose wishes and endeavours are said to have aimed at three things; which were, the re-edifying of Ponte Picolo, and Ponte Grande (which cross two arms of the Sea) and the restoring of this Aqueduct; these he accomplished, but the third which was the expugnation of Vienna, he could never accomplish. Not far from the Temple of Santa Sophia, there is a spacious place surrounded with buildings, like to that of Smith-field, and anciently called the Hippodrom, for that there they exhibited their Horse races.

Pulverecumque fugax Hippodromon ungula pulsar.
Mart. l. 12. Epig. 50.

The swift foot beats the dusty Hippodrom.

As now Atmidan by the Turks, a word of like signification, where the Spachies of the Court play every Friday at Giocho di Cami, which is no other than Prison-bale upon horse-back, hitting one another with Darts, as the other do with their hands; which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer. Nor is it the least contentment to the Christian, to behold the terrible falls that they often get (not rarely costing their lives) whilst by the wreathing of their bodies, or a too hasty turn, they seek to avoid the pursuer; and sometimes the Darts not lighting in jelt on their naked necks, and reverted faces. In this place there standeth a stately Hieroglyphical Obelisk of Theban Marble. On the one side of the Pedestal, this Epigram is engraven, which for that imperfect (as the rest) and of no import, I will forbear to interpret.

DIFFI-

DIFFICILIS QUONDAM DOMINIS PARERE SERENIS
JUSSUS ET EXTINGCTIS PALMAM PORTARE TYRANNIS
OMNIA THEODOSIO CEDUNT SOBOLIQUE PERENNI
TER DENIS SIC VICTUS CECIDIT. MITUSQUE DIEBUS
JUDICE SUB PROCLUS..... SELATUS AD AURAS.

And this on the other side.

KIONA TETPAHAETPON AEIX ΘΟΝΙΚΕΙΜΕΝΟΝ ΑΧΘΟC
ΜΟΥΝΟC ΑΝΑΚΤΕCΑΙ ΘΕΥCΑCΙΟC ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥC
ΤΟΑΜΗCΑC ΠΡΟΚΛΟC ΕΠΕΚΕΛΕΤΟ ΚΑΙ ΤΟCΟC ΕCΤΗ
ΚΙΩΝ ΗΕΛΙΟC ΕΝ ΤΡΙΑΚΟΝΤΑΕΤΟ.

A little removed there standeth a Column of wreathed Brafs, with three infolded Serpents at the top, extended in a Triangle, looking several ways. And beyond both these, another high Obelisk, termed by some a Colossus, built of sundry stones, now greatly ruined, covered heretofore with plates of gilded Brafs; whose basis do yet retain this Inscription,

—ΤΟ ΤΕΤΡΑΗΕΤΡΟΝ ΘΑΥΜΑ ΤΩΝ ΜΕΤΑΡCΙΩΝ
ΧΡΟΝ ΩΘΑΡΕΝ ΝΥΝ ΚΟΕCΤΑΝΤ ΝΟC ΔΕCΗΟΤΗC
ΟΥ ΡΩΜΑΝΟCΤΑΙC ΔΟΖΑ ΤΗC ΚΗΗΤΟΤΗCΙΑC
ΚΡΕΙΤΤΟΝ ΝΕΟΤΗΕΙ ΤΗC ΠΑΛΑΙΟΕΡCΙΑC
Ο ΒΑΡ ΚΟΛΟCCΟCΘ ΕΠΕΚΕΛΕΤΟ ΗΝ ΤΗ ΡΩΑΝ
ΚΑΙ ΧΑΛΚΟC ΟΥΤΟC ΘΑΜΒΟC ΕCΤΙΝ ΕΝΤΗΑΛΕ.

And in Aurabasar (that is, the Market of women) there is an historical Column to be ascended within, far surpassing both Trujans, and that of Antonine, which I have seen in Rome: the work-man having so proportioned the Figures, that the highest and lowest appear of one bigness.

And right against the Mansion of the German Emperours Ambassadour (who only is suffered to lodge within the City) stands the Column of Constantine: about the top whereof you may read this Dilichon.

ΤΟ ΘΕΙΟΝ ΕΡΤΟΝ ΕΝΘΑΛΕ ΩΘΑΡΕΝ ΧΡΟΝΩ.
ΝΕΟΙ ΜΑΝΟΤΗΑ ΕΥΣΕΒΗΣ ΑΥΤΟΚΡΑΤΟΡ.

These are all the remains that are left, (or all that are by the Christians to be seen, besides the reliques of the Palace of Constantine, now made a stable for wild beasts) of so many goodly buildings, and from all parts congeasted antiquities, wherewith this foreign City was in times past so adorned. And with them are their memories perished. For not a Greek can satisfy the Inquirer in the history of their own calamities. So supine negligent are they, or perhaps so wise, as of passed evils to endeavour a forgetfulness. But to say something of Constantinople in general: I think there is not in the world an object that promiseth so much afar off to the beholders, and entred so deceiveth the expectation: the best of their private buildings, inferior to the more contemptible sort of ours. For the Turks are nothing curious of their houses: not only for that their possessions are not hereditary; but esteeming it an egregious folly to erect such sumptuous habitations, as if here to live for ever, forgetful of their Graves, and humane vicissitude. Reproved likewise by the Poet,

Thou Marble best, ere long to part with breath:
And H ues' rear'st, unmindful of thy death.

Tu secunda marmora
Locas sub ipsum funus: & sepulchri
Inmemor, struis domos,
Horat. l. 2. Od. 18.

None being above two stories high, some of rough Stone, some of Timber, some of Sun-dried Brick: their Roofs but tiling a little, covered with such Tiles as are laid on the Ridges of ours, one contrary to another; Yet some part of some of them flat (those belonging to men of principal degree) planted with Flowers and Trees of the rarest colours and productions. Many vacant places there are in the City, and many rows of buildings, consisting of Shops only, all belonging to the Grand Signior, who lets them out unto Trades-men; into which their Wives come not. Women being prohibited by Mahomet to buy or sell (though not now seldom dom they do) or shew themselves publickly. The streets for the most part are exceeding narrow; some raised on the sides for more cleanliness; many having steep ascents, in many places bounded with long dead walls, belonging to great mens Scraglios. So negligent are they of exterior garnishings.

All the Suburbs that this City hath, lie without the Gate of Adrianople; adjoining to the North-west angle thereof, and stretching along the uppermost of the Haven. Where within a stately Monument, there standeth a Tomb of principal repute in the Mahometan devotion: the Sepulchre of Jupe Sultan a Santon of theirs, called vulgarly and ridiculously, the Sepulchre of Job. To which the Captain Bassa doth repair before he sets forth, and at his return; there performing appointed Oraisons and Ceremonies, and upon a victory obtained, is obliged to visit the same every morning and evening, for the space of three weeks. Before this in a Cypress Grove there standeth a Scaffold, where the new Sultans are girt with a Sword by the hands of the Muslis, their principal Prelate, with divers solemnities.

Now speak we of the Haven; rather devoured than increased by a little River called formerly Barbytes, now by the Greeks, Chartaricon, and Chay by the Turks; much frequented by Fowl, and rigorously preserved for the Grand Signiors pleasure, who ordinarily hawks thereon; inasmuch that a servant of my Lord Ambassadors was so beaten for presuming to shoot there, that shortly after he died (as it is thought of) the blows. This falleth into the West extent of the Haven: throughout the world the fairest, the fastest, the most profitable. So conveniently profound, that the greatest Ships may lay their sides to the sides thereof, for the more easte receipt, or discharge of their burthen. The mouth of it is land-locked by the opposite Asia; opening Eastward into the Thracian Bosphorus, which by a long narrow Chanel stretching North and South, joins the black and white Seas: so call they the Seas North and South of the Bosphorus. So that no wind bloweth, which brings not in some Shipping or other to the furnishing of this City; (having as it hath been said before) on the left hand the Euxine Sea, with the Lake of Meotis, inhabited about by multitudes of Nations, and entred into by many navigable Rivers, whereby whatsoever growth, or is nourished in those far-distant Countries, is easily transported unto it: on the right hand Propontis and the Mid-land Sea, (bordered with Nasolia, Syria, Egypt, Africa, Spain, France, Italy, Greece, and Dalmatia, with their fruitful Islands) and without the great Ocean. Inasmuch as it seemeth by the opportunity of Navigation to participate with their several commodities, daily brought hither by Foreigners, feared of it self in a Country, though not altogether barren, yet not sufficient to sustain the Inhabitants. Moldavia and Valachia do serve them with Beeves and Muttons; and as for Fish, the adjoining Seas yield store and variety; as the concaves of the Rocks do Salt, white, pure, and solid; made only by the labour of the furies. But notwithstanding all this.

*What place so wretched see we, so retired?
Worse than the fearful blaze of houses fired,
Their daisly falls, with thousand mischiefs more,
Of that dire City.*

*Quid tam miserum, tam solum vidimus, ut non Deterius credas? horrere incendia, lapsus
Tectorum affluos, ac mille pericula (æva Urbis.*

Juven. Sat. 3.

For I know not by what fate or misfortune, subject it hath been to sundry horrible combustions. Unto that which befel in the days of Leo, and not long after in the reign of Basilicus, (when amongst other infinite losses that famous Library perished, containing 120000 volumes: where, in the inward skin of a Dragon the Odysses and Iliads of Homer were written:) and to divers others this last, though less, may be added, which hapned on the 14. of October in the year 1607. in which 3000 houles were burnt to their foundations. Nor is it to be marvelled at; the Citizens themselves not daring to quench the fire that burneth their own houles; or by pulling down some, to preserve the remainder. An office that belongeth to the Agas and his Janizaries, who nothing quick in their assistance, do often for spite or pillage beat down such buildings as are farther removed from danger. So that the mischief is not only wished for the booty, but prolonged. And not seldom they themselves set the Jews houles on fire, who made wary by the example, are now furnished of arched Vaults for the safeguard of their goods, which are not to be violated by the flame. The fall of houles heretofore by terrible and long-lasting earth-quakes, now by negligence in repairing, tempests, and the matter that they consist of, is here also most frequent, many (as hath been said) being built of Sun-dried Brick. And although it enjoys a delicate air, and serene skies even during the winter, when the East, the West, or South wind bloweth, yet the boisterous Tramotana, that from the black Sea doth sweep its black substance, here most violently rages, bringing often with it such forms of Snow, that in September I have seen the then flourishing Trees so overcharged therewith, that their branches have broken; accompanied with bitter frosts; which dissolving, resolve therewith the infirm matter that sustains them. Lastly, the plague (either hapning through the vice of the Clime, or of those mis-believers, or hither brought by the many frequenting Nations) for the most part miserably infecteth this City: increased by the superstition of the Mahometans, from whom it may be that some one amongst us derived that damnable doctrine; which cost so many lives in the time of our great infection. To these add the Scepter of a Tyrant, with the infolency of Slaves: and then, O new Rome, how are thy thus balanced profits and delights to be valued!

On the other side of the Haven (continually crossed by multitudes of little Boats called Permagias, and rowed for the most part by Egyptians) stands the City of Galata, so called (as some write) of the Gauls, once the masters thereof; or as others will have it, of Galae, which signifieth Milk; for that there the Greeks kept their Cattle, as Perā (another name thereof,) which signifieth beyond, in that on the other side of the Haven, but more anciently Cornu Bizantium. Infirmly walled; yet great, if you comprehend the Suburbs therewith, extending from along the shore to the upper tops of the Mountains; surpassing Constantinople in her lofty buildings. Built by the Genoese, who bought it of the Greek Emperors, (in their declining estate posselt of little more than the regal City, and Title; for the most part sustained by foreign contributions;) and was by them surrendered unto Mahomes the Great, the day after the sacking of Constantinople. At the West end thereof the Grand Signiors Gallies have a dry station, and at the East end, right against the point of his Seraglio, called Tophana, and Fundacle, lies a number of great Ordnance un-planted; most of them the Spoil of Christian Cities and Fortresses, as may appear by their Inscriptions, and Impresses: and many of them of an incredible greatness.

Now right against the mouth of the Haven on the other side of the Bosphorus, stands Scutari, a Town of Bithynia, so named of the Garrison there kept: and formerly called Chrysopolis, for that there the Persians received their tribute from other Cities of Asia. An ample Town, environed with goodly Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seraglio. Before it on a little Rock a good way off from the shore a Tower is erected called the Maiden-Tower, whereof a fable they tell, not worth the relating: now serving as well for a Fort as a watch-Tower, having in it twenty pieces of Ordnance. And although the Sea be so deep between it and the shore that a Ship may sail through, yet is it served with fresh water, some say, brought thither by art, I rather think from a natural Fountain. Scutari sometimes belonged to Chalcedon, once a free City, and seated a little below it: so called of a Brook, now without a name, that runs into Propontis; called also, The City of the blind, because of the foolish Medians that built it. Famous for the fourth general Council there holden: and now only shewing a part of her ruins.

The black Sea is distant some fifteen miles from Constantinople, so named of its black effects, or for the thick mists that usually hang over it, or as some say, of a princely Bridegroom and Bride that therein perished. First, called Axeus, which signifieth unhospital: by reason of the coldness thereof, and humanity of the bordering Nations; who accustomed to sacrifice their guests, to eat their flesh, and of their skulls to make drinking-bowls. But after the Ionians and Greeks had planted certain Colonies thereabout, and displaced the barbarous, it was called Euxinus, which hath a contrary signification. Of this the exiled Ovid.

Frigida me cohibent Euxini littora Ponti,
Ductus ab antiquis Axeus ille fuit.
Ovid Trist. l. 4. Eleg. 4.

Me the cold coasts of Euxine Pontus bold,
More fitly termed Axeus of old.

The form thereof is compared to a Scythian Bow when extended. On the South-side from the Bosphorus it is bordered with Pontus, Bithynia, and Cappadocia, (wherein the Imperial City of Trapezond) Colchis it hath on the East; on the North between it and Caucasus lies a part of Sarmatia Asiatica. Then the Fens of Mæsis,

Quam Scythiae gentes circumdant undique ripis:
Et matrem Ponti perhibent Mæotis undam.

Which Savage Scythians inhabit round:
For Mother of the Pontick Sea renown'd.

and therefore called Yemerinda: fed by the mighty River of Tanais, which divideth Asia from Europe. The rest of the North side is bounded by the European Sarmatia. On the West is confined part of Dacia, and the hither Mæsis, separated by Danubius, and the remainder with Thracia. The Sea is less salt than others, and much annoyed with Ice in the Winter.

There

There where stiff Winter which no Spring remits,
With bonds of Ice the Scythian Pontus knits.

Et qua bruma rigens ac nevia vere remitti
Altrioque Scythicum glaciali frigore Pontum
Lucan. l. 1.

Here the Turk prohibiteth Foreigners to traffick, there being no other passage therein to but by Rivers; neither this passage of Bosphorus as some conjecture, hath been always, but forced by the violence of streams that fell into the over-charged Euxine. Where it rusheth into the Bosphorus, there are two Rocks, that formerly bare the names of Cyaneæ and Symplegades: which for that so near, as many times appearing but as one, they were fained by the Poets un-stable, and at sundry times to juttle each other. Here, upon the top of a Rock environed with the Sea, supposed by some to be one of these, if not too far removed from a fellow to be so, stands a pillar of white marble, called vulgarly the pillar of Pompey.

A. Part of Thrace. B. The Lanthorn. C. Part of Bithynia. D. Euxine Sea: E. Bosphorus.

Upon the shore there is an high Lanthorn, large enough at the top to contain about three-score persons, which by night directeth the Safer into the entrance of the Bosphorus.

The Bosphorus setteth with a strong current into Propontis, and is in length about twenty miles: where broadest, a mile, and in two places but half a mile over. So called, for that Oxen accustomed to swim from the one side to the other: or as the Poets will have it, from the passage of Metamorphosed Io.

Now day and winds invite: to Sea put they,
Where Bosphorus doth his rough floods display.
Io, not then a Goddess, cross'd the same
(Nile) to thy soil: it therefore took that name.

Jamque dies auræque vocant: rursusque cæpeffunt
Æquora, qua rigidus eructat Bosphorus amnes.
Illos (Nile) tuis nondum Des genibus Io
Transferat fluctus: unde hæc data nomina Pontus
Val. Flac. Arg. l. 4.

A. The Rock, supposed one of the Symplegades.
B. The Black Sea.
C. The entrance of the Bosphorus towards Constantinople.

D. The Coast of Asia towards Trapezond.
E. Part of Thrace.
F. The foot of the Lantern Tower.

The basis whereof did bear these now worn-out Characters.

DIVO. CÆSARI. AUGUSTO.
L. CLANNIDIUS.
L. F. CLA. PONTO.

One of those two fore-mentioned Straits lye before Constantinople, the other five miles and above a half, where on Europe side there standeth a Castle called formerly Damalis, and now the black Tower: strongly fortified, and commanding that entry, with the help of the other on the opposite shore: environed with a wall two and twenty foot broad, and containing three great Towers; their walls exceeding ten yards in thickness. This is also a Prison for Captives of principal quality, at such time as the dejectedly beloved Mr. Barton lay here Ambassador for our Nation, there was a certain Hollander, called Hadrian Cant, who being taken by a Renegado, then Captain of two Gallies, was by the Grand Signiors commandment shut up in this place; they expecting great matter for his ransom. Where after he had remained three years, arising one morning before day, and finding the doors open, he descended without the privacy of his keepers into the Court of the Castle. When advising with himself of his escape, and casting his eyes about him, he found a Rope that was tied to a Tree, not far from the wall, which he ascending, by the benefit thereof without danger descended on the other side, and from thence conveyed into the house of our Ambassador; then (as now) a Sanctuary for escaped Captives, where for three days they hid him under a Wood-stack, and not long after shipped him for Holland. In the morning the Captain of the Castle having vainly sought for his Prisoner, filled forth-with a Coffin with Clay, and caused it to be thrown into the Bosphorus, giving it out that he was dead, affrighted with the punishment of his predecessor being ganchied for the escape of certain Noblemen of Germany committed to his custody. Five miles above this, the Bosphorus was passed over a Bridge of Boats by Darius the Father of Xerxes. The European side is bordered almost with continued buildings, the other with fruitful Hills and Orchards, not yielding (I suppose) in delights to that celebrated Theban Tempe, when kept by the more curious Christians, and adorned with their now prostrate Palaces.

Of

A. The black Tower.
B. The opposite Castle.

C. Thracian Bosphorus.
D. Part of Thracia.

E. Part of Bithynia.

Of Novo Roma (a name of Constantine) the adjoining Country is at this day called Romania: formerly Thracia, of Trax the son of Mars, or of Thracia an enchatreis, or rather of the fierce and savage disposition of the people (for to the name importeth) who sacrificed men to Mars and Bellona, when about to join battel. Of these thus Sidnius in his Panegyrick to Antemius.

Thrace flor'd with worthies thy dominions know,
Here I sit lye on Ice, and Cymbrian snow,
Their soft limbs harden, from the bow they are born
The brist doth nourish few: they from thence torn Suck more from Hæsis wounds: milk leaving, so
All gather courage. For while they grow,
They sporting fight with Darts, whom strokes incite.
Boys, apt for bunnings, savage beasts delight
To rattle from Dennis. The youth enrich with spoil
Make Swords their Laws: esteeming spent age vile,
Which steel finds not to death. Even such a life
Lead Mars his brood.

*Thracum terra tua est, heroum fertilis ora,
Excipit hic natos glacies, & maris ab alvo
Artus infantum molles nix Cymbrica durat.
Pectore vix aliter quisquam sed ab ubere tractus
Pius potat per vulnus equum; sic lacte relicto,
Virtutum genus tota bibit, crevere pampum,
Nox pugnam ludunt jaculis; hos suggerit illis
Nutrix plaga jocos, pueri venatus apti
Lustra feris vacuant. Rapto dirata juvenus,
Jura colit gladiis consummatamque senectam.
Non ferro finire pudet. Tali ordine vitæ Cives Martis agunt.*

This Country is confined on the North with mount Hemus, called Catena mundi by the Italians; on the East it hath the Pontick and Propontick Seas; on the South the Aegean joining on the West to Macedonia and the upper Mafia. Her more famous mountains are that afore-said Hemus, Rhodope still topt with Snow, and celebrated for the fongs of Orpheus; Pangæus rich in Silver, and Massapus for high steep piked Rocks to be wondered at. The chief Rivers are, flow Hebrus, salubrious Tramus, and troubled Nessus. The chief Cities next unto this, Nicopolis, Philippi yet boasting of her Amphitheater, Philippolis, Hadrianopolis, Trajanopolis, Selymbria, Perinthus, Phinopolis, and Apollonia. In length it containeth twenty days journey, in Latitude seven. Towards the Sea it is indifferent fruitful; producing Corn, and not contemptible Wines, but the farther removed, the less profitable; lying in a wild champion, made barren by the bitter cold of the Climate. It is under the government of the Beglerbeg of Greece, who is also called the Beglerbeg of Romania.

The Turky now Lord of this Imperial City, (together with the goodliest portion on of the earth) arrived at this height of dominion from so secure an original, as the fame is rather conjectured at, than positively delivered by any. But certain it is, they were a people of Scythia; who forsaking their own homes, in the year 844, compelled by famine, or expelled by their neighbours, entered through the Straights of the Caspian Mountains, and by strong hand possessed themselves of Armenia the greater; called thereupon Turcomania, as it is at this day, multiplying by the daily accession of their Country-men; being in Religion Pagans, and living in wandering Troops, according to the Scythian Nomades. Now the Saracen Empire drawing nigh a period by the division of the Mahometan Princes, Mahomet Sultan of Persia, too weak for the Caliph of Babylon, intreated aid of the Turks, who sent him three thousand Soldiers, under the leading of Tangrolipix, the chief of the Selzucian family, by whose assistance he overthrew the Caliph. Yet would he compell the Turk to do him further service, whereupon a quarrel, and consequently a Battel was commenced between them; in which, Mahomet miscarrying, Tangrolipix by consent of both Armies was elected Sultan. To Persia he adjoined the temporal jurisdiction of Babylon, having subdued the Caliph, but continued the spiritual to his successor, as successors unto their false Prophet; the Turk having then embraced the Mahometan superstition, which was two hundred and fourteen years after their eruption out of Scythia. Acan succeeded his Father Tangrolipix: who upon agreement with Cutlu-Musfer and his kinsman (of kin likewise unto him) then in Arms, assigned unto them the absolute sovereignty of whatsoever they could purchase with their Swords from the Grecian Emperor: who by him aided; subdued Media, much of Armenia, Cappadocia, Pontus, Bithynia, and most of the lesser Asia. On the other side, the Sultan gave to Ducat and Melech, two other of his kinsmen, the Cities of Damascus and Aleppo, with their territories, to hold of him in chief, with whatsoever they could win from the Saracens, who shortly became matters of the greater part of Syria. But soon after beaten out of it (as for the most part out of Asia the less) by Godfrey of Bullen, and his Christian Forces, they were forced to retire into the more Easterly parts of their dominions; so that now their declining glories did seem to imitate, or rather exceed their swift ascension unto Empire. But they shortly after recovered their losses in the lesser Asia. For the warlike Solyman (the son of Cutlu-Musfer) that so withstood the Western Christians, being now dead, Mahomet succeeded him. Between whom, and Masut then Sultan of Iconium, there befel a War, and forthwith an agreement. But Masut in fine possessor of the whole Turkish Kingdom in that part of Asia, dying; did divide it amongst his three sons. To Calizast than he gave the regal City of Iconium, with the under-Provinces; to Jagupasan, Amulka, and Ancyra, with part of Cappadocia, and the territories adjacent; but to Dadune he gave the ample Cities of Cesaria and Sebasta; and all the spacious Countries adjoining: the whole being lately a parcel of the declining Greek Empire. But these ambitious brethren like the sons of the Earth, drew their Swords on each other. The eldest dispossessing Dadune of his patrimony; and turning his Forces upon Jagupasan, (who died in the preparation of that War) seized also upon his. Then invading the adjoining parts of the Empire, in a mortal Battel he overthrew Emmanuel Comnenus the valiant, but unfortunate Emperor; subduing after his death the Country of Phrygia, with divers frontier Cities and Castles. This aged Sultan dying, left behind him four sons, Masut, Coppatine, Reueratine and Chachibsoes. To Masut he bequeathed Anafa, Ancyra, Doryleum, with sundry other Cities of Pontus: to Coppatine, Meliene, Cesarea, Taxara: to Reueratine, Amisum, Doea, with the Sea bordering Cities; but to Chachibsoes (besides the regal seat of Iconium) Lycania, Pamphilia, and the bordering Countries as far as Cotyanium, with the title of Sultan. But these fell also at discord: for Coppatine dying soon after, Reueratine and Masut contended in arms for his possessions. Reueratine prevailing, invadeth the Sultan, takes from him Iconium, expels him out of his dominions, and remaineth sole Sovereign. As these thus here prevailed, to the race of Ducat and Melech before spoken of, recovered all Syria from the contentious Christians, conducted by the glorious Saladine, having also joyned Egypt to that Empire who left nine sons behind; all murdered but one, by Saphradine their Uncle: and he eluding by the means of his fathers favourites, called also Saphradine and Sultan of Aleppo. Of that treacherous Saphradine, Melcedan Sultan of Egypt descended, and Coradin, Sultan of Damascus & Jerusalem. The mighty Empire of Saladine again rent in pieces, yet was still possessed in parts by the Selzucian family until driven out of Syria by the Tartars and dispossessed of Egypt by the Mamulucks. But the Turkish Empire that was planted in Persia by Tangrolipix, and in those Eastern Countries, after it had continued an hundred, hundred three-score and ten years was utterly subverted by the Tartars. A fierce and barbarous people, dwelling on the North of the mountain Caucasus, who oppressed by Famine at the persuasion of one Zingis, a Prophet of theirs, their Leader, and honoured by them with the title of Great Cham, like a violent Inundation brake over those Mountains that had for many ages confin'd them, and over-spread all the East of Asia, even as far as the great Ocean. Hecata his son built Quinjay in China and Cambalu in Cathaya, making the last named the seat of the Empire. Dividing his populous Army, some he sent into the South, some into the North, some into the West; who subdued the Aracossians, Margians, Medes, Persians, Parthians, Assyrians, Mysopotamians, Armenians, Colchians and Iberians; with whom the Turks not able to encounter, quitted those countries, and led by Aladine one of the Selzucian family, joined themselves with the Country-men in the lesser Asia; who took Cilicia from the Greeks, with the places adjoining, then in wars with the Latines; first planting the seat of their new kingdom in Sebalia, and after at Iconium. Aladine left behind him two sons, Azadin, and Jahbatine: they falling out for the sovereignty, the younger was driven by the elder into exile. But Azadin dying Jahbatine returneth, and is received for Sultan: after slain in single combat by Theodoros Lascaris the Greek Emperor. Another of that name succeeded him, who, overthrown by the victorious Tartars, and forced out of Iconium, the Turks were at length constrained to pay them tribute, and to become their liege-men. Jahbatine dying in exile, the Great Cham divideth his kingdom between Masut and Cei-cubades (descended both of the Selzucian family) as to his tributary vassals. Thus this late mighty Empire, extinguish in Egypt by the Mamulucks, in the greater Asia by Tartars, as also in the less was for a time deprived of all principality. For not long continued they under the government of the aforesaid Princes, every one seizing on a part, according to the proportion of his power; and of the ruines of a Monarchy, erected an Anarchy. The bolder fort possessing themselves of the straights of the Mountains, by their many incursions annoying the Christians; and having given the Emperors Lieutenant a bloody overthrow in Paphlagonia, over-ran all the Country unto the River Sangarius, subduing Pontus and Gallatia; and South-ward unto the Lycian and Carian Seas, and to the River Euxine, which they divided into several Toparchies. Now of those two fore-named Princes, Masut died issue-less, but Aladin succeeded his father Cei-cubades, titular Lord of the whole, but tributary to the Tartars, the last of the Selzucian family. He dying, Sabib the head Vesir usurped the Sovereignty, yet held it not long. The Great ones sharing amongst them (as they had done the rest) the remainder of that dis-membred Kingdom.

Ottoman among these possessed Siguz, a little Lordship in Bithynia. Not seized on by force, but given by Aladin the first, unto his father Ertogriel the son of Solyman, one of the Oguzian family, and once Sultan of Machin, who forsaking his Kingdom for fear of the Tartars, long led a wandering life with uncertain fortunes. But Ertogriel turning into the lesser Asia, requested of Aladin that he would allow some corner of his so large a Kingdom, for him, his distressed Country-man, and his family to rest in. Who mindful of what himself had suffered (having besides in a Battel almost lost against the Tartars, by his unexpected supply of four hundred Horse, recovered the Victory) assigned him this Village to winter in, and the Mountains adjoining for the summering of his Cattel, with some command upon the frontiers. Where he long lived a quiet life, beloved both of Turks and Christians continuing, for his peaceable nature and good offices done them. Dying in the fourscore and thirteenth year of his age, and in the year of our Lord 1289, he left three sons behind him, Jundus, Saragatin, and this Ottoman, whom the Oguzians elected for their Governor. Now the Christians having done some outrages to his people, he thereupon surprized divers of their Castles, overthrew the Greeks in sundry conflicts, took from them the City of Nice, for which he made many honours proffered by the latter Aladin, which whilst he lived he forbore to accept; but dead, took upon him the title of Sultan, making Neapolis his regal seat, in the year 1300 to which is to be referred the beginning of the Ottoman government. Who in those seven and twenty years that he reigned, annexed Bithynia, Cappadocia, and most of those strong holds that border on the Euxine Sea to his Kingdom. Him his son Orchan succeeded, who took the great City of Prusa, and honoured it with his residence. Having much enlarged his dominions, he dyed in the two and thirtieth year of his reign, resigning his State to Amurath his son. He upon the dissent of the Greeks, first passed over the Straights into Europe, took Abydos and Calippolis with the whole Chersonesus. Then entering further into Thracia, subdued Philippolis & Adrianople; and proceeding conquered Servia and Bulgaria, passeth into into the upper Mysia: and stabbed by a common Souldier, in the one and thirtieth year of his Reign, was succeeded by his Son Bajazet. He, possessor of the greatest part of Thrace, subdued a large part of Greece, with the Country of Phocis; twice but vainly, besieging Constantinople. Taken at length by Tamurlain, and carried about in an Iron Cage, he desperately brained himself in the year 1399. his Son Calepine (some say) succeeded him, attributing unto him fix years of Government: esteemed by others but a Fable; who give the succession to his youngest Son Mahomet: the cause of this diversity of opinions, proceeding from the Turkish Kingdom thus again suppressed by the Tartars. The many Sons of Bajazet, and other Mohometan Princes, possessor of several Provinces, and striving with one another for undivided Sovereignty: by Mahomet at length was obtained: who united again that dismembered Empire: enlarging the same with the accession of Dacia, Walachia, the greater part of Slavonia and Macedonia, even unto the Ionian Sea. Who translated the seat of his Empire from Prusa unto Adrianople, where he died, having reigned seventeen years; if the same be accounted from the death of his Father. His Son by the name of Amurat the Second ruled in his stead: who conquered Epirus, Attolia, Attica, Bœotia, Achaia, and Theflalonica. He left his State to Mahomet the Second (after he had reigned eight and twenty years) whose Conquests deservedly gave him the addition of Great: having utterly ruined the Greek Empire, taken from them Constantinople the Imperial City, the Emperour Constantine being trod to death by the press of people in Adrianople Gate, and thereby gained the Title of Emperour. He subdued also the Empire of Trapezond, erected there by Alexius Comnenus, at such time as the Greeks did lose their European Empire to the Latins. Moreover, Athens, Corinth, all Peloponnesus, Bosnia, Lemnos, Enbœa, Mitylen, &c. and died not without suspicion of poison, in the one and thirtieth year of his Empire. Bajazet the Second, his Son, having ended his Wars with his Brother, conquered all Cilicia, a part of Armenia, with the rest of Cappadocia, which before belonged to the Carmanian Kingdom. He invaded Syria, but with worse success: and then converting his forces against the Venetians, took from them Nasatius, Mithona, Dyrrachium, and almost depopulated Dalmatia. But in the six and thirtieth year of his Reign, he was poisoned by a Jew, at the procurement of Selymus his Son and Successor: (who, besides the civil Wars with his Father and Brethren) conquered all Syria and Egypt from the ruined Mammalucks, and brought Arabia under his subjection. After, intending to invade the Christians, he died of a most loathsome disease, when he had reigned eight years. His Son Solyman taketh Rhodes, at several times over-runneith Hungary: possessing himself of Buda, Strigoniun, alba regalis: dispossesseth the Persians of Tauris: and joyneth Babylon, with the Countries of Media, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, to his Empire. Arabia is not free from his Conquests; nor the Portugals in India enough removed from the reach of his ambition. He died in the six and fortieth year of his Reign. Selymus the Second succeeded, the only Son that he had left unmurdered: who won by his Lieutenants Cyprus from the Venetians. They also enlarged his bounds with Valachia, Moldavia, and the Kingdom of Tanis. He reigned eight years. His Son Amurat the Third succeeded: who warred not in person, nor achieved much by his Deputies, yet reigned he nineteen years. Neither was Mahomet the Third his Son a Souldier, being but once in the field, and thence terribly affrighted. Nor enlarged he his Dominions by the valour of others: his forces being chiefly employed in suppressing of intestine Rebellions. He reigned eight years ingloriously, and left the now reigning Achmet to succeed him: the fourteenth Sultan, and the eighth Emperour of the Ottoman Family; who yet hath added nothing to his so vast an Empire; the greatest that is, or perhaps that ever was from the beginning. For first, the European part thereof extendeth West-wards unto the Archdukes of Austria's Dominions, stretching to the Adriatick Sea, by the Confines of Ragusa, bounded on the South with the Mediterræanum, on the East with Ægeum, Propontis and Pontus, even to Theodosia, a City of the Scythian Chersonesus and on the North almost to Russia and Polonia: containing Romania, Bulgaria, Serbia, Rosia, the tributary Principalities of Valachia and Moldavia; the greater part of Hungary, Bosnia, Albania, Macedon, Epirus, all Grecia and Peloponnesus; all the fruitful Islands of the Ægean Sea. Ragusa pays for her liberty; nor his Candie, Zant, or Cephalonia held without presents. But what is this compared to her ancient Territories? within which, all Natolia is comprised; on the three ages embraced with the Ægean, Euxine, and Cilician Seas: containing the Provinces of Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Phrygia, Lycia, Pamphylia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and the lesser Armenia, beyond which also Calchis thence stretching North-ward to Casai, and bounded on the East with the Country of the Georgians, whereof the Turks possess not a little. A great part it also containeth of the greater Armenia: all Syria (in which Calchidia, Phœnicia, and Palestine, Babylonia, and Mesopotamia: Arabia felix which stretcheth out into the South Sea, interpoling the Persian and Arabian Gulphs, do bow to that Sovereignty: so do the Inhabitants of Petrea and Deserta; such I mean as have known Habitations: In Africa it extendeth all along the Coasts of the Mediterræanum; even from the Red Sea, to Acrath, a City of Mauritania (except some few places possessed by the Spaniards) wherein is the Country of the Troglodytes, the miraculously fertile Kingdom of Egypt, Tripoly in Barbary, the Kingdom of Tanis, and City of Argiers with her Territories, with the Tributary Kingdoms of Fesse and Morocco. To this add Cyprus, Rhodes, and all the fertile Islands of the mid-land Sea, that lye East of Candy. Thus great at this day is the Ottoman Empire; but too great for it are their assumed Titles: as, God on Earth, shadow of God, sole Monarch of the World, King of Kings, Commander of all that can be commanded, Sovereign of the most Noble Families of Persia and Armenia, possessor of the holy Cities of Mecca and Jerusalem, Lord of the black and white Seas, Sultan of Babylon; and so proceeding with a repetition of their several Kingdoms. Like swelling Attributes gave this now reigning Sultan to our Sovereign in a Letter writ lately, which I will insert for the strangeness.

Coun-

Unto the most glorious and most mighty King James, one of the Great Lords of the creation of Jesus, and most laudable amongst all the Princes of the Nations of Messias, a Judge of all debates and differences of the people of Nazareth, Possessor of the great Majesty, riches, and glory, a Judge of the most great Kings of England, &c. facing his Letter with like sustain, calling his own Court, Our most happy and shining Fort, a Port of refuge for the world: and subscribing, From our Imperial Residence at Constantinople, most strongly and nightly guarded. Yet in his own title more modest, containing no more than Sultan Achmet Chan: Son to Mahomet Chan most invincible.

But the barbarous policy whereby this Tyranny is sustained, doth differ from all other: guided by the heads, and strengthened by the hands of his Slaves, who think it as great an honour to be so, as they do with us that serve the Courts of Princes: the natural Turk (to be so called a reproach) being rarely employed in command or service. Amongst these Slaves there is no nobility of blood, no known Parentage, Kindred, nor hereditary Possessions; but are as it were of the Sultans Creation, depending upon him only for their sustenance and preferments, who disposeth, as well of their lives as their fortunes, by no other rule than that of his will; although sometimes for form he useth the assent of the never gainsaying Messia. These are the Sons of Christians (and those the most completely furnished by Nature) taken in their Childhood from their miserable Parents, by a Leavy made every five years (or oftner or seldomr, as occasion requirerth) throughout the whole Empire, (excepting certain privileged places, amongst which are Sio and Constantinople) who are bestowed in several Seminaries, instructed in the Mohometan Religion (changing their Names upon their Circumcision) taught the use of their several Weapons, and made patient of hunger and labour, with inured abstinence, and continual exercise. These they call first Jemglans, who have their Faces shaven (the token of servitude,) wearing long Coats and capped Caps, not unlike to our Idcoats. The choicest of them for spirit and feature, and after a while received into the Grand Signiors Seraglio: distinguished by Chambers like to those in Hospitals, according to their Seniorities: where all are brought up in the discipline of War, and not a few acquainted with the secrets of State: such as by the excellency of their gifts do assure the expectation of a future eminency; those of the first Chamber are the first preferred: yet not in order, but according to the worth of the place, and worthiness of the person. Of these come the Beglerbegs (the name signifying a Lord of Lords) of whom there be only two: the one of Greece, and the other of Natolia: who command all the Horsemen in those Countries under the General: the great Bassas, (whereof some are Generals of Armies, some Viziers of the Port, the rest Vice-roys of the Provinces:) the Sauziackys Governours of Cities, for so the name signifieth, with their Territories and Forces, and other Officers both of War and Peace, with those of the Court of principal place and attendance. Of the other Jemglans some come to the Chiausers; who go on Embassies, execute Commandments; and are as Pursuivants, and Under-Sheriffs, attending the employment of the Emperour; (who mounted on Horseback carry Dabazes, a weapon like a Mace before him) and on the Courts of Justice: soliciting also the causes of their

E

their Clients. But the Spahies and Janizaries which are most made of these Jemogians (the principal cause of their institution) are the Nerves and Supporters of the Turkish Monarchy. The Spahies are Horsemen, weaponed for the most part at once with Bow, Mace, Lance, Harquebush, and Cymitar, whereof they have the several uses: agreeing with their fights, their flights, or pursuements. For defence some wear Bucklers and Shirts of Mail. The skirts of their Coats, when they ride are gathered within long Stammel brogs that reach to their ankles, and there do join to their Buskins laced with Iron; and supply the want of Spurs with their large and sharp Stirrups. Their Saddles are placed behind and before, the seat deep and hard; and for carapison they use for most part the Skins of Leopards, Lyons, Tygers, Panthers, and the like. In Cities when on foot they wear Gowns of Stammel with long Hanging sleeves: and are distinguished from others by the folding up of their Shashes. Of these there be two sorts: the Vleffi, which is to say, stipendiary, who are almost altogether made of these Jemogians; and the Timariots, who consist of all sorts of people. The first as yet unprefixed, under the command of several Captains, do attend upon the immediate employment of the Emperour: who alloweth unto each the daily pension of ten Alpers, paid them every quarter. Of these there be two and thirty thousand. The one half of them are called Spahiegians, who wear red Pendants on their Spears, and when in the Field, march on the right hand the Sultan, as the other on the left, who are called Sililibarspabeis, bearing yellow and white Pendants. The other dispersed throughout the whole Empire, do live upon their particular Tenements for term of life assigned them; and thereupon so called. It being the policy of his State to erect in the conquered Countries a number of Timariots, answerable to the greatness thereof: whereby the principal part of the Souldiery is provided for, and the Empire strengthened, both against foreign invasions and revolts of the subdued. Of these, as they say, there are upward of seven hundred thousand, every one being to find as many Horses as his Farm doth double the yearly value of sixty Sultanies: ready to be commanded by their several Zanzacks; or by their Bassas: these bear on their Lances white and red Pendants. But the Janizaries (a name that signifieth new Souldiery) at those that bear such great sway in Constantinople: inasmuch that the Sultans themselves have been sometimes subject to their insolencies. They are divided into several Companies, under several Captains: but all commanded by their Agas, a place of high trust, and the third in repute through the Empire: howbeit, their too much love is to him an assured destruction. These are the flower of the Turkish Infantry, by whom such wonderful Victories have been achieved. They call the Emperour Father (for none other is there for them to depend on) to whose valour and faith in the time of War he committeth his person: they having their stations about the Royal Pavillion. They serve with Harquebushes, armed besides with Cymitars and Hatchets. They wear on their heads a Bonnet of white Felt, with a lap hanging down behind to their shoulders; adorned about the brows with a wreath of metal, gilt, and set with stones of small value; having a kind of sheath or socket of the same erected before, wherein such are suffered to stick Plumes of Feathers as have behaved themselves extraordinary bravely. They tuck up the skirts of their Coats when they fight or march: and carry certain days provision of Victuals about with them. Nor is it a cumber: it being no more than a small portion of Rice, and a little Sugar and Honey. When the Emperour is not in the Field, the most of them reside with him in the City: ever at hand upon any occasion to secure his person, and are as were the Pretorian Cohorts with the Romans. They are in number about forty thousand: whereof the greater part (I mean of those that attend on the Court) have their being in three large Seraglios; where the Juniors do reverence their Seniors, and all obey their several Commanders (as they their Agas) with much silence and humility. Many of them that are married (a breach of their first institution) have their private dwellings: and those that are busied in foreign employments, are for the most part placed in such Garrison Towns as do greatly concern the safety of the Empire. Some are appointed to attend on Ambassadors: others to guard such particular Christians as will be at the charge, both about the City, and in their Travels, from incivilities and violences, to whom they are in themselves most faithful: wary and cruel in preventing and revenging their dangers and injuries: and so patient in bearing abuses, that one of them of late being strucken by an Englishman (whose humorous swaggering would permit him never to review his Country) as they travelled along

Some say there are a million.

long through Mores, did not only not revenge it, nor abandon him to the pillage and outrages of others, in so unknown and savage a Country: but conducted him unto Zam in safety, saying, God forbid that the villany of another should make him betray the charge that was committed to his trust. They are all of one Trade or other. The pay that they have from the Grand Signior is but five Alpers a day: yet their elder Sons as soon as born are enrolled and received into pension; but his bounty extendeth no further unto his progeny, (the rest reaped as natural Turks): nor is a Janizary capable of other preferments than the command of ten, or twenty, or of an hundred. They have yearly given them two Gowns apiece, the one of Violet Cloth, and the other of Stammel; which they wear in the City: carrying in their hands a great tough Reed, some seven foot long, and tipped with Silver, the weight whereof is not seldom felt by such as displease them. Who are indeed so awful, that Justice dare not proceed publicly against them, (they being only to be judged by their Agas;) but being privately attached, are as privately thrown into the Sea in the night time. But then are they most tumultuous, (where to they do give the name of affection) upon the dangerous Sicknesses of their Emperours: and upon their deaths commit many outrages. Which is the cause that the great Bassas as well as they can, do conceal it from them, until all things be provided for the preferment of the next for them to salute. Whereupon (besides the present larges) they have an Alper a day increase of pension: so that the longer they live, and the more Emperours they outlive the greater is their allowance.

But it is to be considered, that all these before-named, are not only of that tribute of Children. For not a few of them are Captives taken in their childhood; with divers Renegadoes, that have most wickedly quitted their Religion and Country, to fight against both: who are to the Christians the most terrible Adversaries. And withal they have of late infringed their ancient Customs, by the admitting of those into these orders, that are neither the Sons nor Grand-sons of Christians: a natural Turk born in Constantinople, before never known, being now a Bassa of the Port.

Over and above these, and besides the Auxiliary Tartars, whereof there are lightly threecore thousand (who live on Spoil, and serve without Pay) that are ever assistant; the Grand Signior hath other Forces whom they call Achings, who have nothing but what they can get by foraging, being Hinds of the Country, and tied to serve on Horseback for certain privileges that they hold, in number about thirty or forty thousand, but small in value: as are the Azaps, who serve on Foot (yet properly belonging to the Gallies) better acquainted with the Spade than Sword; thrust forward with purpose rather to weary, than to vanquish the Enemy; whose dead bodies do serve the Janizaries to fill up Ditches, and to mount the Walls of assaulted Fortresses: besides many Voluntaries, who follow the Army in hope to succeed the slain Spahies and Janizaries: Now nothing curious at such a time to receive those that be not the Sons of Christians into the Order. Such are the Turkish Forces, both in quality and proportion: and he that shall see three hundred thousand of these in an Army (as he might have done this last Summer in Bithynia) so disciplined, so appointed, and so daringly resolute, whose only repute consists in their Valours; and whose defeats are punished in their Commanders as offences: furnished with such abundance of great Ordnance (much whereof they cast according to their occasions, carrying with them the metal upon the backs of Camels) will not only not wonder at their Victories, but rather how the rest of the yet unvanquished World hath withstood them. I have heard a Prince (and he of no small experience) impute the sundry overthrows given them by a small number of Christians to the paucity of Commanders, and their want of experience, some one Saxiack having under his Conduct five thousand Timariots, and he perhaps but newly crept out of the Sultans Seraglio, exercised only in speculative Conflicts. So that their numbers prove often but cumbers; and the advantage lost, encountered by the many expert Directors of few; who are also far better defensively armed. But he that hath bounded the Sea, hath also limited their furies. And surely it is to be hoped, that their greatness is not only at the height, but near an extremum precipitation: the body being grown too monstrous for the head; the Sultans unwarlike and never accompanying their Armies in person; the Souldier corrupted with ease and liberty; drowned in prohibited Wine, enfeebled with the continual converse of Women; and generally lapsed from their former austerity of life, and simplicity of manners. Their Valours now meeting on all

F. 2

all sides with opposition; having of late given no increase to their Dominions: and Empire so got, when it ceaseth to increase, doth begin to diminish. Lastly, in that it hath exceeded the observed period of a Tyranny, for such is their Empire. Now when they march, the Tartars do scour the Country two days journey before: then follow the Achings; after them the Timariots: next those few Jemogians that be; next them the Janizaries; the Chansers follow on Horseback, (who carry Bows and Arrows betides their Maces and Cimyers:;) then comes the Sultan with the Officers of his Court, and Archers of his Guard who are Footmen; the splendid Sapheis marching on either side of him. An hundred Coaches covered with red, with four Horses a piece, are drawn after, which carry the Hicglans (his Pages) and Eunuchs: about these the Jemogians called Eal-giers are placed. The Carriages of the Army ensue; followed by Voluntaries, who go in hope (as before said) to be entertained in the rooms of the slain; with the Servants of the Sapheis in the Court, and certain Janizaries, Ar-toglans, Lepellers and Dregellers. The Janizaries have Boots, Swords of Wood, and the like born before them for their Ensigns: and the royal Standard is no other than a Horse-tail tyed to the end of a Staff: which though seeming rude, and answerable to their original, doth retain, perhaps something of Antiquity. For Homer sticketh the like in the Crest of the gallantly-armed (though not so spirited) Paris.

Capiti autem forti galeam affabre factam imposuit.
Cristatam ex fetis equinis: horribilis autem crista
deleper mutabat. l. l. 3.

Then puts he on a Helm well wrought and brave,
Plum'd with Horse hairs that horribly did wave.

As for their Forces at Sea, they are but small in comparison of what they have been, and compared to those of particular Christian Princes, but contemptible. Approved by the Florentine, who with six Ships only hath kept the bottom of the Straights for these three years past in despite of them: inasmuch as they have not dared to hazard the Revenue of Egypt by Sea. But have sent it over Land with a Guard of Souldiers, to their no small trouble and expences: the whole Armado coming often in view, yet not so hardy as to adventure the onset. The Admiral having thought it a safer course to employ the Pirates of Tunis and Algiers in that service, who have many tall Ships (the spoil of Christian Merchants) and warlike appointed: now grown expert in Navigation, and all kind of Sea-fights, by the wicked instruction of our fugitive Pirates, and other Renegadoes. But those Pirates have no heart to such an enterprise, where the Victory would prove so bloody, and the Booty so worthless. The Navy that is yearly set forth in the beginning of May, to annoy the Enemy, suppress Pirates, collect Tribute, and reform disorders in the Maritime Towns that belong to the Admiralty; consists of not above threecore Gallies: which are all that can be spared from their other places of employment. And that there be no more is said to proceed from the want of Captives, by reason of their general Peace with the Christians: for such, and such as are condemned for Offences, are only chained to the Oar, except the necessity be urgent. As for matter to build with, they want none: no more do they workmen: many excellent in that Art, and those Christians, being emitted from all parts with liberal pensions to work in their Arsenals. The Captain Bassa (for so is the Admiral called) when not in service, hath his Residence in Constantinople and Gallipoli. A man in regard of his place, of principal repute: and commanding the Commanders of Gallipoli, Galata, Lemnos, Nicomedia, Lesbos, Chios, Naxos, Euboea, Rhodes, Cavalla, Nauplia, Lepanto, Cyprus, and Alexandria. In October he returneth from his annual circuit: as he did now during our abode in the City, and entered the Haven in triumph. The Gallies divided into sundry Squadrons, and tricked all in their gallantry; rowing at their sterns three or four little Vessels no bigger than Fish-boats. A ridiculous glory, and a prize to be ashamed of. But it was thought that the Grand Signior would have given him but a bad welcome, that durst not adventure with such odds of number on the becalmed Florentines. During the Winter the Armado is dispersed, and the Gallies are drawn unto their dry stations. In which time the Pirates, both Christians and Mahometan, do rob on the Aegean and Mediterranean unconscionably, but by the defensive strength of the assailed.

Thus

Thus is the Great Turk served by those whom he may advance without envy, and destroy without danger. The best of them living a wandering and unhappy life, removed from one Command to another; and to parts so far distant, that often more time is spent in their journey than in their abode. The greatest Commander, and in the strength of his Command, submitting his neck unto the Executioners Bow-string, when sent by the Tyrant with the fatal Box that includeth the Commission. Nor booteth it to resist in hope of partakers, when one mans preference is built on the desired overthrow of another: being allo, as is said before, without Kindred or Alliance: so that Rebellions do but rarely happen. And although these great Slaves attain to great Riches, yet are they (as it were) but the Collectors thereof for his treasure: whether at their deaths it returneth, all save what it pleaseth him to bestow on their posterity: who never are advanced to eminent places, being a cause of the greater neglect to have had excellent Parents, as to them of ruine to be beloved in their Governments. Nay, so much the continuance of honours in Families are avoided, that when a Bassa is given (for so I may term it) to the Sitter or Daughter of a Sultan for an Husband, the Children begotten on them do most rarely rise above the degree of a private Captain. But more severe are these Tyrants to their own, who lop all the Branches from the Bole; the unnatural Brother solemnizing his Fathers Funerals with the slaughters of his Brothers. So fearful are they of rivalry, and so damnable politick; making all things lawful that they may secure the perpetuity of their Empire. Not now to seek in those precepts of Phoenius,

Scepters do lose their sway when Kings grow just:
Respects of honesty, towers tomb in dust.
Free villanies a hated Reign assure
And Swords still drawn: dire deeds do but secure
The Doer whilst a doing. Courts shew they
That would be good. Virtue and sovereign sway
Still jar. Spill fear be whom foul facts dismay.

Sceptorum vis tota petit, si pendere iusta
Incipit: everetque arces repedus honesti,
Libertas scelerum est quæ regna invisa tuetur.
Sublaticque modus gladiis, facere omnia sæve,
Non inipune licet nil quæm facis: exeat aula.
Qui vult esse pius: virtus & summa potestas
Non coeunt, semper metuet quem sæva pudebunt. Lucan. l. 8.

Yet they mourn for those being dead, whom they murdered: honouring them with all dues of burial, and customary lamentations. Now if the Ottoman Line should fail, the Crim Tartar is to succeed (both being of one Family: and of one Religion:) as the Turk, the Tartar; who hath at this day the election of the Tartarian Emperours; but with this limitation, that he is to be of one of the Sons of the deceased.

Their Moral and Ecclesiastical Laws, the Turk do receive from Mahomet the Saracen Law-giver: a man of obscure parentage, born in Irarip a Village of Arabia, in the year 551. His Father was a Pagan, his Mother a Jew both by birth and Religion. At the first he exercised merchandize; having by the marriage of his Mistress (not effected, as was thought, without witch-craft) attained to much riches: whereupon he became a Captain of certain voluntary Arabians that followed the Emperor Heraclius in his Persian Wars. Who falling into a mutiny, for that they were denied the Military Garment; and incensing the rest of their Nation with the reproachful answer given them by the Treasurer, which was, That that ought not to be given unto Dogs, which was ordained for the Roman Souldiers; a part of them chose Mahomet for their Ring-leader, who had aggravated their discontents, and confirmed them in their Rebellion. But being disdained by the better sort for the baseness of his birth; to avoid ensuing contempt, he gave it out, that he attained not to that honour by military favour, but by divine appointment. That he was sent by God to give a new Law unto Mankind; and by force of Arms to reduce the world unto his obedience. That he was the last of the Prophets, being greater than Christ, as Christ was greater than Moses. Two years together he lived in a Cave, not far distant from Mecæ, where he compiled his damnable Doctrine, by the help of one Sergius a Nestorian Monk, and Abdalla a Jew: (containing a hodge-podge of sundry Religions:) which he first communicated to his Wife, perfwading her that it was delivered him by the Angel Gabriel, who had cut open his heart, and taken from thence the little black Core (which the Turk do affirm to be in the heart of every man) wherein the Devil doth plant his temptations: and shewed him withall the joys and mysteries of Paradise. His new Religion by little and little he divulged in Mecæ: countenanced by the powerful alliance which he had by his sundry Wives: and followed by many of the Vulgar, allured with the liberty thereof, and delighted with the novelty.

E 3

But

But the Nobles of Mecca going about to apprehend him, he fled to Medina, not two days journey distant: whither followed by a number, wicked of life, and desperate of fortunes, he waged a successful War against the Syrians; planted his Religion amongst the vanquished: and after making himself Lord of Mecca, made that the place of his residence. Where he died in the great Climatrical year of his age; having made them believe, that the third day after he would ascend into Heaven: whereupon he was kept above ground till their was infected with his favour, and then buried at Medina. Another promise he made concerning his return, which should have been a thousand years after. which the Mahometans excuse as mis-understood, by reason of his feeble voice, even then a dying; and that he did say two thousand: to which time they have prorogued their expectations. Mean of stature he was, and evil proportioned: having ever a scald head, which (as some say) made him wear a white Shash continually: now worn by his Sectaries. Being much subject to the Falling-tickness, he made them believe that was a prophetic trance; and that then he conversed with the Angel Gabriel. Having also taught a Pigeon to feed at his car, he affirmed it to be the Holy Ghost, which informed him in divine precepts. Not unlike to Nama's feigned familiarity with Aegolus and Pithagoras his Eagle; whose policy perhaps he imitated: whereby as they the Romans and Crotonians; to draw he the gross Arabians, to a superstitious obedience. For he had a subtle wit, though viciously employed; being naturally inclined to all villanies. Amongst the rest, so insatiably lecherous, that he countenanced his incontinency with a Law: wherein he declared it, not only to be no crime to couple with whomsoever he liked, but an act of high honour to the party, and insuring sanctity. Thus planted he his irreligious Religion, being much assisted by the iniquities of those times: the Christian estate then miserably divided by multitudes of Heresies. So that the diffinuity of the Professors, made many to suspect the profession, and to embrace a Doctrine so indulgent to their affections. Which enlarging as the Saracens and Turks enlarged their Empires, doth at this day well-nigh over-run three parts of the earth; of that I mean that hath civil Inhabitants. Yet are the Mahometans divided into threecore and twelve Sects, sprung from the two fountains. Of that named Imania, the Persians are drunk; of the other called Lefare, the Syrians, Arabians, Turks, and Africans.

The Alcoran, which containeth the sum of their Religion, is written in Arabic, Rhime, without due proportion of numbers: and must neither be written nor read by them in any other Language. Besides the positive doctrine, (to itself contradictory) it is filled with Fables, Visions, Legends, and Relations. Nor is it at this day the same that was written by Mahomet, (although so credited to be by the Vulgar;) many things being secretly put in, and thrust out; and some of the repugnancies reconciled by the succeeding Caliphs. Mahomet the second is laid to have altered it much, and added much to it. This Book is held by them in no less veneration, than the Old Testament by the Jews, and the New by the Christians. They never touch it with unwash'd hands: and a capital crime it is, in the reading thereof to mistake a Letter, or displace the Accent. They kiss it, embrace it, and swear by it: calling it, The Book of Glory, and director unto Paradise. To speak a little of much; they teach that God is only to be worshipped, only one, and the Creator of all: righteous, pitiful; in wisdom and power incomprehensible. How God made man of all sorts and colours of earth; and being formed, for thousands of years laid him a baking in the Sun, until he was pleased to breathe life into him. Then commanded he all his Angels to reverence him: which the Devil, at that time an Angel of light, refused to do; expostulating why he should so honour that Creature whom he knew would become so polluted with all manner of (by him particularized) vices. That God therefore condemned the Devil to Hell; who ever since hath continued an enemy to man. Idolatry they hold to be the most accursed of Crimes; and therefore they interdict all Images and Counterfeits whatsoever; repute the Christians Idolaters, for that they have them in their Churches and Houses: imagining also that we worship three Gods, as not apprehending the mystery of the Trinity. They deny the Divinity of Christ, yet confess him to be the Son of a Virgin: Mary conceiving by the smell of a Rose which was presented her by the Angel Gabriel; and that the bare him at her Breasts. They hold him to be a greater Prophet than Moses; and the Gospel better than the Law: inasmuch as no Jew can turn Turk, until he first turn Christian; they forcing him to eat Hogs-flesh, and calling him Abdula, which signifieth the Son of a Christian: who after two or three days, abjuring Christ, is made a Mahometan. They say, that the blessed Virgin was free from original sin and the temptations of the Devil.

Devil. Christ is called in the Alcoran, the Breath and Word of God; said to know the secrets of hearts, to raise the dead to life, cure diseases, restore sight to the blind, and speech to the dumb: and that his Disciples wrought miracles by his virtue. Yet visit they not his Sepulchre in their Pilgrimages (not thinking him to have dyed) as generally bruited. For being, as they say, led toward the place of execution, God not permitting to base a people to put to death so holy a Prophet (for they confess that he never sinned) did assume him into Heaven: when melt, and fought by the Soldiers in the throng, they laid hold of one of the Judges that had condemned him, who resembled him much in favour and proportion, telling him that he should not escape from them again; and so not believing, whatsoever he said, did execute him in his room. They sharply punish all such as blaspheme him; and say that he shall return to judgment about forty years before the worlds ending. The Holy Ghost they acknowledge; yet not as being distinct in person, but only as a power and operative virtue in the God-head, which inspirith good motions into the heart, the producer of good actions. They are commanded seven times a day to resort unto public Prayers: the first assembling is called Timgil-namas, which is two hours before day: the second Sabah-namas, at daybreak: the third Vyle-namas at Noon: the fourth Kydi-namas at three of the Clock: the fifth Algham-namas, after Sun-set: the sixth Chogic-namas, two hours within night: and the seventh Gium-namas, at ten of the Clock in the morning: the last also on Fridays observed by all, on the other days but by the more religious. Congregated they are, as aforesaid, by the chanting of the Priest from the tops of Steeples: at which times lightly though they be in the fields, they will spread their upper Garments on the earth, and fall to their devotions. Moreover, I have seen them conjointly pray in the corner of the Streets, before the opening of their Shops in the morning. Friday is their Sabbath, and yet they spend but a part thereof in their Devotion, and the rest in Recreations: but for that time they observe it so rigorously, that a Turk here lately had his ears nailed to his Shop-board for opening it too timely. Before they pray, they wash all the organs of their senses; their legs to their knees, and their arms to their elbows: their privities after their purging of Nature; and sometimes all over from top to toe: for which there are Houses of Office with Conduits belonging to every principal Mosque. Where water is wanting they do it with dust. At the door of the Mosque they put off their shoes; and entering, sit cross-legged upon rows of Mats one behind another, the poor and the rich promiscuously. The Priest in a Pulpit before them, not otherwise distinguished in Habit, but by the folding up of their Turbant. When they pray they turn their faces towards Mecca: first standing upright, without any motions of their bodies, holding the Palms of their hands upward; sometimes they stop their eyes and ears, and oft pull their hair on the sides of their faces: then thrice they bow, as in their salutations; and as often prostrating themselves on the earth, do kiss it. Doing this sundry times, they will look back upon no occasion, until they come unto the salutation of Mahomet: at which time they reverse their faces, first over the right shoulder, and then over the left, believing that his coming will be behind them when they are at their devotion. The Priest doth sometimes read unto them some part of the Alcoran (holding it, in reverence to the Book, as high as his chin,) sometimes some of their fabulous Legends, intermixing expostions and instructions: which they hearken unto with heedful attention, and such fleshy postures of body as if they were entranced. Their Service is mixed with Songs and Responses: and when all is done they stoke down their Faces and Beards with looks of devout gravity. If they find a Paper in the Streets, they will thrust it in some Crevice of the adjoining Wall, imagining that the Name of God may be contained therein, and then prophane to be trod under foot, or otherwise defiled. They number their often repetition of the Names of God and his Attributes (with other short ejaculations of prayer or praise) upon Beads: some shaking their heads incessantly, until they turn giddy: perhaps in imitation of the supposed Trances (but natural infirmity) of their Prophet. And they have an Order of Monks, who are called Derwises, whom I have often seen to dance in their Mosques on Tuesdays and Fridays; many together, to the sound of Barbarous Musick, Dances that consist of continual turnings, until at a certain stoke they fall upon the Earth; and lying along like Beasts, are thought to be rapt in spirit unto celestial conversations. Now the Women are not permitted to come into their Temples (yet have they secret places to look in through Grates) partly for troubling their devotions, but especially for that they are not excused, as are the Women of Persia and Abissinia.

Nor circumscribe they the Males until they be able to answer the Priest, and promise for themselves: which is for the most part at the age of eight. They are circumcised in the Houses of their Parents, at a Festival meeting, and in the midst of the Assembly, the Child holding up his fore-finger, in token that he is a Mahometan. As soon as cut, the Priest washeth the wound in water and salt, and bindeth it in Linnen. Who changeth not his name, but is from thenceforth called a Musselman: which is a true Believer. This done, he is carried unto the Banna, where his hair (before that time worn at full length) is shaven, and so kept ever after: all saving a lock on the top of his crown, by which they dream that they shall be assumed by Mahomet into Paradise: then put they on him a white Turbant; and so returning with Drums and Hobbies, with great solemnity conducted to the Mosque, and presented with gifts according to his quality.

The Turks do fast one Month in the year, which they call Ramazan: which changeth yearly, (so that in thirty years they fast one) wherein, they say, that the Alcoran was delivered unto Mahomet by the Angel. Observed by all but the infirm and Travellers: who are to fast for as long a time, when to they recover, or come to the end of their journey. But they fast but during the day: in the night they feast, and then all their Steeples stuck round with Lamps, which burn till the morning: affording an object of great Solemnity. Such as instead of abtaining from meats, do abstain at that time from their Mosques, they carry about in scorn, and severely chastise: but such as then drink Wine, they punish with death. Upon the discovery of the New Moon (which they superstitiously gratulate, esteeming him happy that discovereth it first, and by the count thereof do reckon their years,) falling out this year on the seventh of December, the Feast of the great Byram did begin; which doth continue for three days together: observed by them as Easter is with us. On the first day the Grand Signior rode to Santa Sophia in all the pomp and glory of Empire: of which we shall speak hereafter. Upon his return we saw a sort of Christians, some of them halt earth already, crooked with age, and trembling with Palfies; who by the throwing away of their Bonnets and lifting up of their Fore-fingers, did proffer themselves to become Mahometans. A fight full of horror and trouble, to see those desperate wretches that had professed Christ all their life, and had suffered, no doubt, for his sake much contumely and oppression, now almost dying, to forsake their Redeemer, even then when they were to receive the reward of their patience. To these the Tyrant a little retired his Body: who before not so much as cast his eye aside, but fate like the adored Statue of an Idol. For they hold it a great grace and an act of singular piety, to draw many to their Religion; presenting them with money, change of raiments; and freeing them from all Tribute and Taxes. Inasmuch that if a Christian have deserved death by their Law, if he will convert, they will many times remit his punishment. But they compel no man. During this Festival they exercise themselves with various palfiames: but none more in use, and more barbarous, than the swinging up and down, as Boys do in Bell-Ropes, for which there be Gallowses (for they bear that form) of an exceeding height, erected in sundry places of the City: when by two joining Ropes, that are fastned above, they will swing themselves as high as the transform. Perhaps affected in that it stupifies the senses for a season: the cause that Opium is so much in request, and of their forehead shaking of their heads, and continued turnings. In regard whereof they have such as have lost their wits, and natural Ideots, in high veneration; as men ravished in Spirit, and taken from themselves, as it were, to the fellowship of Angels. These they honour with the title of Saints, and lodge them in their Temples: some of them going almost stark naked; others clothed in shreds of several colours; whose necessities are supplied by the peoples devotions: who kiss their Garments as they pass through the Streets, and bow to their benedictions. Yea, many by counterfeiting the Ideot, have avoided punishment for offences which they have unwittingly fallen into. Whilst the Byram lasteth you cannot stir abroad but you shall be presented by the Devices and Janizaries, with Tulips and trifles, besprinkling you with sweet water; nor cease to do, till they have drawn reward from you.

The Turks are encouraged to Alms by their Alcoran, as acceptable to God, and meritorious in it self, if given without vain-glory, and of goods well-gotten: alledging it to be a temptation of the Devils to abstain from Alms for fear of impoverishment. Their more publick Alms consist in Sacrifices (if not so wrongfully termed) upon their Festivals, or performance of Vows: when Sheep and Oxen are

flain

flain by the Priest, and divided amongst the poor; the owners not so much as retaining a part thereof. They say, they give much in private: and in truth, I have seen but few Beggars amongst them. Yet sometimes shall you meet in the streets with couples chained together by the neck, who beg to satisfy their Creditors in part, and are at the years end released of their bonds; provided that they make satisfaction if they prove afterward able. At their deaths they usually give Legacies for the release of Prisoners, the freeing of Bond-slaves, repairing of Bridges, building of Houses for the relief of Passengers: and the Great men, to the erecting of Mosques and Hospitals, which they build not seldom in their life time. But Mahomet the Great, and Solyman the Magnificent, have in that kind exceeded all others: whose stately and sumptuous structures do give a principal ornament to the City; where the sick and impotent are provided for, and the stranger entertained; (for here be no Inns:) the revenue of that of Mahomet amounting to an hundred and fifty thousand Sultanies. To these there belong Physicians, Chirurgeons, Apothecaries. The charge thereof is committed unto their Priests, who bring up a certain number of Youths in the Mahometan Law, and frequently pray for the departed Souls of the Founders in the Chappels, of their Sepulchres. They extend their charity to Christians and Jews, as well as to them of their own Religion: nay birds and beasts have a taste thereof. For many only, to let them loose, will buy Birds in Cages; and bread to give unto Dogs. These have in this City no particular owners; being reputed an unclean Creature, and therefore not suffered to come into their Houses: thinking it nevertheless a deed of piety, to feed, and provide them Kennels to litter in, most of them repairing to the Sea-side nightly, where they keep such a howling, that if the wind sit Southward, they may be easily heard to the upper side of the City of Pera.

With the Stoicks they attribute all accidents to destiny, and confections at birth, and faw with the Tragedian,

*Fates guide us: unto Fates yield we,
Care cannot alter their decree.
For what we suffer, what we do,
Celestial Orb, proceed from you.
All go in a prefixed way.
The first prescribeth the last day.*

*Fatis agitur: credite Fatis.
Non sollicita possunt curae,
Mutare rati flamina iusti.
Quicquid patitur mortale genus,
Quicquid facinus, venit ex alto.
Omnia certo terminis vadunt,
Irimque dies dedit extremum;
Senec. in Oedi.*

affirming that their ends were written in their foreheads:

*—Therby freed from deaths affright,
The work of fears, thence take they heart to fight
And rush on Steel—*

*—Quos ille timorum
Maximus haud urget leti metus, inde ruendi
In ferrum mens prona viris.
Lucan. l. 1.*

since it can be neither hastened nor avoided: being withal persuaded that they dye bravely that dye fighting; and that they shall be rewarded with Paradise, that do spend their blood upon the enemies of their Religion, whom they call Shahides, which is Martyrs. For although they repute murder to be an execrable Crime, that crys to Heaven for vengeance, and is never forgiven: yet are they commanded by their law, to extend their profession by violence, and without compassion to slaughter their opposers. But they live with themselves in such exemplary concord, that during the time that I remained amongst them (it being above three quarters of a year) I never saw Mahometan offer violence to a Mahometan, nor break into ill language: but if to they chance to do, a third will reprove him, with Eye Mussel-men, fall out? and all is appeased; he that gives a blow, hath many gashes made in his flesh, and is led about for a terror: but the man-slayer is delivered to the Kindred or Friends of the slain, to be by them put to death with all exquisite torture.

Now their opinion of the end of the World, of Paradise, and of Hell, exceed the vanity of dreams, and all old Wives Fables. They say that at the winding of a Horn, not only all flesh shall dye, but the Angels themselves: and that the earth with Earthquakes shall be kneaded together like a lump of dough, for forty days so continuing. Then shall another blast restore beauty to the world, and life unto all that ever lived. The good shall have shining and glorified faces; but the bad, the countenance of Dogs and Swine, and such like unclean Creatures. Moses, Christ, and Mahomet shall bring their several Followers to judgment, and intercede for them. Cain that did the first murder murder shall be the Ring-leader of the damned ; who are to pass over the Bridge of Justice, laden with their sins in Satchels ; where the great sinner shall fall on the one side into Hell ; where they shall consume in fire, and be renewed to new torments. Yet God will have pity upon them in the end, and receive them unto mercy : and the Devil shall cease to be, since his malice is such as he cannot be fayed. I was told by a Scitilian Runegado, an Eunuch, and one greatly devoted to their Superstition, that the burning Globe of the Sun (for such was his Philosophy) was the Continent of the damned. Those that tumble from the other side of the Bridge are laden with less sins : and do but fall into Purgatory : from whence they shall shortly be released, and received into Paradise. But as for the Women, poor souls ! be they never so good, they have the gates shut against them : yet are consigned to a mansion without, where they shall live happily : as another replet with all misery for others. It is to be more than conjectured ; that Mahomet grounded his devised Paradise, upon the Poets invention of Elisium. For thus Tibullus describeth the one :

Sed me, quod facilis tenero sum temper amori,
Ipsa Venus campos ducit in Elyfios.
Hic choreæ, castulq; vident : passimq; vagantes.
Dulce sonant tenoi pectore carmen aves.
Fert casiam non culta leges, totosque per agros
Floret odoratis terra benigna Rosas.
Ad juvenum series teneris immittit puellis
Ludit : & affluæ prælia miscet amor.
Eleg. 1.2.

For that my heart to love still easily yields,
Love shall conduct me to the Elysian fields.
There Songs and Dances revel : choice birds fly
From tree to tree, warbling sweet melody.
The wild Shrubs bring forth Cassia : every where
The bounteous soil doth fragrant Roses bear.
Youths intermix with Maids disport at ease,
Inconstraining still in loves sweet skirmishes.

And Mahomet promisseth to the possessors of the other, magnificent Palaces spread all over with Silk Carpets, flowry Fields, and crystalline Rivers ; Trees of Gold still flourishing : pleasing the eye with other goodly forms, and the taste with their fruits ;

— primo aulæ non deficit alter
Aureus, & simili frondescit virga metallo.
Virg. Æn. 1.6.

Which being pluckt, to others place resign,
And still the rich twigs with like metal shine.

Under whose fragrant shades they shall spend the course of their happy time with amorous Virgins, who shall alone regard their particular Lovers : not such as have lived in this world ; but created of purpose ; with great black eyes, and beautiful as the Hyacinth. They daily shall have their lost Virginities restored : ever young, (continuing there, as here at fifteen, and the men as at thirty) and ever free from natural pollutions. Boys of divine feature shall minister unto them, and set before them all variety of delicate Viands. But Avicen that great Philosopher and Physician, who flourished about four hundred and fifty years since, when Mahometanism had not yet utterly extinguished all good literature ; who was by lineage an Arabian of a Royal House, in Religion a Mahometan, but by Country and Habitation a Spaniard, and Prince (as some write) of Corduba, teacheth a far different Doctrine. For although as a Mahometan, in his Books De Anima and De Almahad, addressed particularly to a Mahometan Prince, he extollet Mahomet highly, as being the seal of divine Laws, and the last of the Prophets ; excusing his sensual felicities in the life to come, as merely Allegorical, and necessarily fitted to rude and vulgar capacities : (for faith he, if the points of Religion were taught in their true form to the ignorant dull Jews, or to the wild Arabians, employed altogether about their Camels ; they would utterly fall off from all belief in God :) yet besides that this excuse is to favourable and large, that it may extend as well unto all Idolaters, and in brief to the justifying of the absurdest errors, it is a point of Doctrine so contrary to his own opinion, as nothing can be more. For Avicen himself, in the aforesaid Books, doth censure so vilely of the body, that he pronounceth bodily pleasures to be false and base ; and that the souls being in the body is contrary to true beatitude : whereupon he denieth also the Resurrection of the flesh. Yet in favour, as hath been said of Mahomet, (who by sensual Doctrine sought to have the rude world to follow him) he not only by his Allegorical construction approveth the Doctrine of the Resurrection of the body, wherein the Jews and Mahometans consent with the Christians, but withal the transmigration of souls from one body into another, (by which means Mahomet devised how a Camel might pass through the eye of a Needle ; the soul of a sinner for purgation entering first into the body of a Camel, then of a lesser Beast, and finally, of a little Worm which should creep through the eye of a Needle : and so become perfect :) and lastly, not once reproveth that impious saying of Mahomet, That God himself at the Resurrection should also have a body, no doubt, to enjoy those sweet sensual felicities, though all such opinions are disclaimed by him : but contrariwise approveth the Doctrine of the Christians touching Spiritual Happiness, and that saying of our Saviour, that, The Saints in the world to come shall be as Angels (yet professeth the same to be true) as being weak and ill fitted to vulgar understanding. So strangely may wife men be seduced with fiction, to excuse and commend the teaching of absurd errors even by themselves condemned, and to lay an aspersion upon the purity of Divine Doctrine, in that unfit to be so communicated to the ignorant : as if Truth were to make her felt to please bettal Ignorance, and Ignorance not rather to be enlightened by degrees, and drawn up to behold the Truth. But now this Avicen, laying down for a while his outward person of a Mahometan, and putting on the habit of a Philosopher ; in his Metaphysics seemeth to make a flat opposition between the truth of their Faith received from their Prophet, and the truth of understanding by demonstrative argument : And faith in effect, that this Law and Prophecy delivered by Mahomet, which taught that God himself at the Resurrection should have a body, placeth the happiness of the life to come in bodily delights. But wise Theologians, faith he, have with greater desire pursued spiritual pleasures proper to the soul : and for this corporal felicity, although it should be bestowed upon them, would not esteem it in comparison of the other, whereby the mind is conjoined to the first truth, which is God. And here he never mentioneth that strained excuse of an Allegory ; but with just indignation and some acerbity of speech, detesteth that gross opinion broached in their Law, which placeth the predominance of everlasting felicity in the baseness of sensuality, and in that low voluptuousness : and faith that a prudent and understanding man, may not think that all delight is like the delight of an Ass ; and that the Angels who are next to the Lord of the worlds, should live deprived of all pleasure and joy, and that he who is the highest in beauty and virtue, should consist in the least and lowest degree of swavity. And therefore concludeth, that neither in excellency, nor in perfection, nor yet in multitude, nor in any thing praise-worthy or to be desired in pleasure, there is any comparison between those felicities : and though base souls be addicted to that base felicity, yet the worthy desires of holy minds are far removed from that disposition ; and contrariwise being joined to their perfection (which is God) are filled with all true and happy delights : and if that the contrary persuasion or affection should be remaining in them, it would hurt and withhold them from attaining unto that height of happiness. This being his better advised and more sincere discourse, it utterly excludes his former excuse of an Allegory, whose right use, being by plain and sensible allusions to draw up the understanding to an apprehension of divine things, represented in those similitudes : the course held by Mahomet worketh a clean contrary effect ; and drowneth their understanding part and affection in the hope and love of these corporal pleasures. Whereby it is true, that he greatly enlarged his own earthly Dominion ; but by this judgment even of Avicen, with-held his Followers from the true felicity. And it is worthy observation, that in the judgment of Avicen, one thing is true in their faith, and the contrary in pure and demonstrative reason. Whereas (to the honour of Christian Religion be it spoken) is confessed by all, and enacted by a Council, that it is an error to say, One thing is true in Theology, and in Philosophy the contrary. For the truths of Religion are many times above reason, but never against it. So that we may now conclude, that the Mahometan Religion being derived from a person in life so wicked, so worldly by his projects, in his persecutions of them so disloyal, treacherous, and cruel, being grounded upon base and false revelations, repugnant to sound reason, and that wisdom which the divine hand hath imprinted in his Works ; alluring men with those enchantments of fleshly pleasures, permitted in this life, and promised for the life ensuing ; being also supported with tyranny and the Sword (for it is death to speak there against it,) and lastly, where it is planted rooting out all virtue, all wisdom and science, and in sum, all liberty and civility, and laying the earth so waste, depopled and uninhabited ; that neither it came from God (save as a scourge by permission) neither can bring them to God that follow it.

come

Ebbabecker, Omaz, Ozman, and Haly, followed Mahomet in the Government ; the great enlarger of their Religion and Dominions : but Haly was persecuted, and slain in the end by the other, for assuming the right of succession, in that he had married the Daughter of their Prophet. From him the Persians do challenge

Tract 9.
cap. 7. 129.

priority of Government in matters of Religion, the main cause of the hatred between them and the Turks alledging moreover, that the former three, to confirm their authorities, did fallily add to the Alcoran, and put out what they listed; and in such sort falsified, left it to their Followers. Then succeeded the Caliphs of Babylon, who bore both the spiritual and temporal jurisdiction. After the Egyptians set up a Caliph of their own. But in process of time they were both suppressed; the one (as hath been laid before) by the Tartars, and the other by the Sultans. The dignity amongst the Turks with much abatement, doth now remain in the Musties, (which name doth signify an Oracle, or answer of doubts) as successors to Ebbecher, Omar, and Ozman: The Caliphs having been both High-Priests, and Princes, these being Patriarchs, as it were, and Sovereigns of their Religion. Throughout the whole Turkish Territories there is but one; who ever resideth in the Royal City; or follows the person of the Emperor. He is equal to the ancient Popes; or rather greater both in repute and authority. The Grand Signior doth rise at his approach to salute him, and sets him by him, and gives him much reverence. His life is only free from the Sword; and his fortunes most rarely subject to the subversion. The Emperor undertaketh no high design without his approvement. He hath power to reverse both his sentence, and the sentence of the Divan, if they be not adjudged by him conformable to the Alcoran; but his own is irrevocable. In matters of difficulty they repair to him; and his Exposition standeth for a Law. To conclude, he is the supreme Judge, and rectifier of all actions, as well Civil as Ecclesiastical; and an approver of the Justice of the military. The place is given by the Grand Signior to men profoundly learned in their Law, and of known integrity. He seldom flirts abroad, and never admits of impertinent Conversation. Grave is his look, grave is his behaviour,

Rarus sermo illis, & magno libido tacendi.

Juv. Sat. 2.

Highly affecting silence, and most spare
Of speech.

For when any come to him for judgment, they deliver him in Writing the state of the question; who in writing briefly returns his oraculous answer. He commonly weareth a Vest of green, and the greatest Turban in the Empire: I should not speak much out of compais, should I say as large in compais as a Bulhel. I oft have been in this mans Seraglio, which is neither great in receipt nor beauty: yet answerable to his small dependency, and infrequency of Suters. He keepeth in his House a Seminary of Boys, who are instructed in the mysteries of their Law. He is not restrained, nor restraineth himself from the penalty of women. His Incomes are great, his disbursements little, and consequently his wealth infinite: yet he is a bad pay-master of his debts, though they be but trifies. He much delighteth in Clocks and Watches: whereof, as some say, he hath not so few as a thousand.

Next in place to the Mustie are the Cadischchiers, that are Judges of the Armies (but not to meddle with the Janizaries) and accompany the Beglerbegs when they go into the Field. Of these there are only two: one of the European part of the Empire, and another of the Asian: These are also elected by the Grand Signior, as the Cadisch by them (yet to be allowed by the Grand Signior, and to kiss his Velt:) of whom there is one in every Town, who besides their spiritual functions, do administer Justice between party and party, and punish Offenders. Of inferior Priests there be some particularly appointed to sing at the tops of their Steeples, and to congregate the people; some to look to the Ceremonies, and some to read and interpret the Alcoran. There are also other Religious Orders, which I omit to speak of being of others own taking up; neither commanded nor commended, and rather to be esteemed Vagabonds than Religious persons, consider we either their life, or their habits.

Amongst the Turkish Commandments, one is, that, drawn originally from our Saviour, Thou shalt not do what thou wouldst not have done to thee: Whereupon for the most part their Civil Justice is grounded; not disagreeing greatly from the Laws of Mosca. All evictions there are elsewhere, depend upon Witnesses: yet will not the Oath of a Christian or a Jew be received against a Turk, as will a Turk against them, and theirs one against another. But the Kindred of Mahomet have their single testimonies in equal value with the testimony of two others. Notwithstanding, the Oath of a Mahometan will not be taken, if impeached for a drinker of Wine, or eater of Swines flesh. Every Bassa keeps a Divan (so they call the Court of Justice) within his Province: but the highest of all, and to which they may appeal from all other, is that which is kept four days of the week in the Grand Signiors Seraglio, from whence no appeal is admitted but to the person of the Mustie. Here the Vizier Bassa of the Port, who are nine in number (or as many as then are not otherwise employed) do sit in Justice: where also they consult of matters of State, and that publicly, not excepting against Embassadors, Drogemen, lightly always present, so presume they of strong hand: assisted by the (a) Admiral, (b) Chancellor, the (c) Treasurer in the staid room keeping his Court; where all Causes whatsoever that are heard, within the space of three days are determined; the Grand Vizier Bassa being President of the rest. But Bribery not known until lately amongst them, hath so corrupted their integrity, that those Causes (if they bear such a colour of right) do seldom miscarry where gifts are the Advocates, yet this is the best of the worst, that they quickly know their successes. But many times when the oppressed subject can have no Justice, they will in Troops attend the coming forth of the Emperor, by burning straw on their heads or holding up Torches, provoke his regard: who brought unto him by his Mutes, doth receive their Petition; which oftentimes turns to the ruine of some of those great ones. For assurances of Purchases they have no Indentures, no Fines and Recoveries. The omitting of a word cannot trullate their Estates, nor quirks of Law prevail against conscience. All that they have to shew, is a little Schedule, called a Hodge or Sigil, only manifesting the possession of the Seller, as his of whom he bought it, or from whom it descended unto him; which under-written by the Cadie of the place, doth frustrate all after-claims whatsoever. Now the punishments for offenders be either pecuniary or corporal. To impose the former, they will forge all the slanders that they can, to eat upon the less circumpect Christians: but the other are seldom unjustly inflicted. Their terms of putting to death, (besides such as are common elsewhere) and impaling upon stakes, ganching (which is to be let fall from on high upon Hooks, and there to hang until they die by the anguish of these wounds, or more miserable famine) and another invented (but now not here used) to the terror of mankind by some devilish Prillul, who deserved to have first tasted of his own invention, viz. they twich the offender about the waste with a Towel, enforcing him to draw up his breath by often pricking him in the body, until they have drawn him within the compais of a span, then tying it hard, they cut him off in the middle, and setting the body on a hot plate of Copper, which seareth the veins, they so up-prop him during their cruel pleasure: who not only retaineth his sense, but the faculties of discourse, until he be taking down, and then departeth in an instant. But little faults are chastised by blows, received on the soles of the feet with a Bastinado, by hundreds at a time, according to the quality of the misdemeanour. A terrible pain that extendeth to all the parts of the body: yet have I seen them taken for money. The Master also in this sort doth correct his Slaves; but Parents their Children with stripes on the belly. The Saubashie is as the Constable of a City both to search out and punish offences.

It remaineth now that we speak of the persons of the Turks, their dispositions, manners, and fashions. They be generally well complexioned, of good features, and full bodies, proportionably compacted. They nourish no hair about them, but a lock on the crown, and on their faces only; elsemient it more cleanly, and to be better prepared for their superstitious washings. But their beards they wear at full length, the mark of their affected gravity, and token of freedom, (for Slaves have theirs shaven) inasmuch that they will scoff at such Christians as cut, or naturally want them, as if suffering themselves to be abused against nature. All of them wear on their heads white Shashes and Turbans, the badge of their Religion: as is the folding of the one, and size of the other, of their vocations and quality. Shashes are long Towels of Calico wound about their heads: Turbans are made like great Globes, of Calico too, and thwarted with rolls of the same, having little copped Caps, on the top, of green or red Velvet, being only worn by persons of rank; and he the greatest, that weareth the greatest, the Musties excepted, which over-izeth the Emperors. And although many Orders have particular ornaments appointed for their heads, yet wear they these promiscuously. It is an especial favour in the Turk, to suffer the Christian tributary Princes, and their chiefest Nobles to wear white heads in the City, but in them, what better than an Apollitical insinuation? But to begin from the skin: the next that they wear is a Smock of Calico, with ample sleeves, much longer than their arms: under this, a pair of Calcons of the same, which reach to their ankles, the rest naked, and going in yellow or red slip-shoots, picked at the Toe, and plated on the sole: over all they wear an half-sleeved Coat girt unto them with a Towel: their neck all bare: and this within doors is their Summer-accountment. Over all when they go abroad they wear Gowns, some with wide half-sleeves (which more particularly belong to the Greicians) others with long hanging sleeves, buttoned before: and a third sort worn by the meaner sort, reaching but a little below the knee, with hanging sleeves not much longer than the arm, and open before; but all of them ungathered in the shoulders. In the Winter they add to the former Calfoldons of Cloth, which about the small of their leg are sewed to short smooth buskins of leather without soles, fit for the foot, as a Glove for the hand: lining their Gowns with Fur, as they do their Coats; having then the sleeves (or quilted Waste-coats under them) reaching close to their wrists. They wear no Gloves. At their Girdles they wear long Hankerschers, some of them admirable for value and workmanship. They never alter their fashions: not greatly differing in the great and vulgar more than in the rich. Cloth of Tissue, of Gold and Silver-velvet, Scarlet, Sattin, Damask, Chamolets, lined with Sables and other costly Furs, and with Martins, Squerrils, Foxes, and Coney-skins, are worn according to their several qualities. But the common wear is Violet-cloth: they retain the old Worlds custom in giving change of garments: which they may aptly do, when one Velt fitteth all men, and is of every mans fashion. The Clergy go much in green, it being Mahomet's colour; and his Kinsmen in green Shashes, who are called Emers, which is, Lords: the Women also wear something of green on their heads to be known. There lives not a race of ill-favoured people, branded perhaps by God for the sin of their seducing Ancestor, and their own wicked assenting of hereditary holiness. But if a Christian out of ignorance wear green, he shall have his cloaths torn from his back, and perhaps be well beaten. They carry no Weapons about them in the City; only they thrust under their Girdles great crooked Knives of a Dagger-like size, in sheathes of metal; the hasts and sheathes of many being set with stones, and some of them worth five hundred Sultanies. They bear their bodies upright, of a stately gait, and elated countenance. In their familiar salutations they lay their hands on their bosoms, and a little decline their bodies: but when they salute a person of great rank, they bow almost to the ground, and kiss the hem of his garment. The ornaments of their heads they never put off upon any occasion. Some of them perfume their beards with Amber and the insides of their Turbans: and all of them affect cleanliness to Religiously, that besides their customary lotions, and daily frequenting of the Bannias, they never so much as make water, but they wash both their hands and privities: at which business they sequester themselves, and couch to the earth; reviling the Christian whom they see pissing against a wall, and sometimes striking him. This they do, to prevent that any part of either excrement should touch their garments, effecting it a pollution, and hindring the acceptation of prayer, who then are to be most pure both in heart and habit. So slothful they be, that they never walk up and down for recreation, nor use any other exercise but shooting; wherein they take as little pains as may be, sitting on Carpets in the shadow, and sending their Slaves for their Arrows. They also shoot against earthen walls, ever kept moist in Shops and private Houses for that purpose, standing not above six paces from the Mark, and that with such violence, that the Arrow passes not seldom thorow: nay, I have seen their Arrows shot by our Ambassadors thorough Targets of Steel, pieces of Brails of two inches thick, and thorough wood, with an Arrow headed with wood, of eight inches. Their Bows are for form and length, not unlike the Lath of a large Crof-bow, made of the Horns of Buffaloes, intermixed with sinews, of admirable workmanship, and some of them exquisitely gilded. Although there be Wrestlers among them, yet they be such as do it to delight the people, and do make it their profession, as do those that walk upon Ropes, wherein the Turks are most expert; going about when they have done, to every particular Spectator for his voluntary benevolence. Of Cards and Dice they are happily ignorant; but at Chefs they will play all the day long, a sport that agreeth well with their sedentary vacancy; wherein notwithstanding they avoid the dishonest hazard of money. The better sort take great delight in their Horses, which are beautiful to the eye, and well ridden for service; but quickly jaded, if held to a good round trot (for amble they do not) in an indifferent journey. But the Turks do not lightly ride so fast as to put them unto either. Their Saddles be hard and deep, though not great, plated behind and before, and some of them with silver, as are their massive Stirrups, and the reins of their Bridles, suited unto their costly Caparisons.

When

when they stand in the Stable they feed them for the most part, if not altogether, with Barley; being here of small value, and only serving for that purpose. They litter them in their own dung, first dried in the Sun, and pulverated; which keeps their skins clean, smooth, and shining.

The Turks do greatly reverence their Parents, (so commanded to do by their Law) as the Interior his Superiour, and the young the aged, readily giving the Priority to whom it belongeth, the left hand as they go in the streets preferred before the right, in that made Masters thereby of the Sword of the other, and the chiefest place the farthest from the wall, who live together, as if all of a brother-hood. Yet give they no entertainment unto one another, nor come there any into their houses but upon special occasion, and those but into the publick parts thereof: their Women being never seen but by the Nurses and Eunuchs which attend on them. Yea so jealous they are, that their Sons, when they come to growth, are separated from them. As their Houses are mean, so are their Furnitures: having nothing on the inside but bare white walls, unless it be some special Room in the house of some of high Quality. But the Rooms of many of them are curiously sciled with inlaid Wood, adorned with Gold and Azure of an excessive coarseness; the greater part of the floor, and that a little advanced, being covered with Turkish Carpets, whereon when they tread, they do put off their slip-shoes. Many of their rooms have great out-windows, where they sit on Cushions in the heat of the day. They lye upon Mattresses, some of silk, some stained linen, with Bolsters of the same, and Quilts that are suitable, but much in their Cloaths, the cause perhaps that they are so loutie. Nor shame they therat: many you shall see fit publicly a lousing them in the Sun, and those no mean persons. They have neither Tables nor Stools in their Houses, but sit crof-leg'd on the floor at their Victuals, all in a Ring. Instead of a Cloth, they have a skin spread before them, but the better sort sit about a round Board, standing on a foot not past half a foot high, and brim'd like a Charger. The dishes have feet like standing Bowls, and are to set one upon another, that you may eat of each without removing of any. Their most ordinary food is Pillaw, that is, Rice which hath been sod with the fat of Mutton: Potage they use of sundry kinds, Eggs fried in Honey, Tannies, (or something like them) Pasties of sundry ingredients: the little flesh which they eat is cut into goblets, and either sod, or roasted in a Furnace. But I think there is more in London spent in one day than in this City in twenty. Fish they have in indifferent quantity. But the commons do commonly feed on Herbs, Fruits, Roots, Onions, Garlick, a beastly kind of unpressed Cheese that lieth in a juice; hodge-podges made of flower Milk and Honey, &c. so that they live for little or nothing, considering their fare, and the plenty of all things. They are waited upon by their Slaves, given them, or purchased with their Swords or Money: of these to have many it is accounted for great riches. When one hath fed sufficiently he riseth, and another taketh his room, and so continue to do until all be satisfied. They eat three times a day: but when they feast they sit all the day long, unless they rise to exonerate nature, and forthwith return again. They abstain from Hogs-flesh, from Blood, and from what hath dyed of it self, unless in cases of necessity. Their usual drink is pure water, yet have they sundry Sherbets, (so they call the Confections which they infuse into it) some made of Sugar and Lemmons, some of Violets, and the like, whereof some are mixed with Amber) which the richer sort dissolve therinto. The Honey of Sio is excellent for that purpose: and they make another of the Juice of Railins, of little cost, and most usually drunk off. Wine is prohibited them by their Alcoran: they plant none, they buy none: but now to that liberty they are grown (the natural Turk excepted) they that will quaff freely when they come to a house of a Christian: insomuch as I have seen but few go away unled from the Embassadors Table. Yet the feared disorders that might ensue thereof, have been an occasion that divers times all the Wine in the City hath been stayed (except in Embassadors houses) and death hath been made the penalty unto such as presumed to bring any in. They prefer our Beer above all other Drinks. And considering that Wine is forbidden, that water is with the rawest (especially in this Climate) the dearest of Sherbets, and plenty of Barley (being here sold not for above nine pence a Bushel) no doubt but it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the sale thereof amongst them. Although they be destitute of Taverns, yet have they their Coffa-houses, which something resemble them. There sit they chatting most of the day; and sip of a drink called Coffa (of the Berry that is made of) in little China Dilbes, as hot as they can suffer it : black as soot, and tasting not much unlike it (why not that black broth which was in use amongst the Lacedemonians ?) which helpeth, as they say, digestion, and procureth alacrity : many of the Coffa-men, keeping beautiful Boys, who serve as Stales to procure their Customers. The Turky are also incredible takers of Opium, whereof the lesser Asia affordeth them plenty, carrying it about them both in Peace and War ; which, they say, expelleth all fear, and makes them courageous : but I rather think giddy-headed, and turbulent dreamers, by them, as should seem by what hath been said, religiously affected. And perhaps for the self same cause they also delight in Tobacco : which they take thorow Reeds that have joyned unto them great heads of wood to contain it. I doubt not but lately taught them, as brought them by the English : and were it not sometimes lookt into (for Morist Bassa not long since commanded a pipe to be thrust thorow the nose of a Turk, and so to be led in derision thorow the City) no question but it would prove a principal Commodity. Nevertheless they will take it in corners, and are so ignorant therein, that that which in England is not falable, doth pass here amongst them for most excellent.

They are by their Law in general exhorted to marry, for the propagation of their Religion : and he ill-reputed of that forbearth so to do, until the age of five and twenty. Every man is allowed four Wives, who are to be of his own Religion, and as many Concubine Slaves as he is able to keep of what Religion soever. For God (saith the Alcoran) that is good and gracious, exacteth not of us, what is harsh and burdensome, but permits us the nightly company of Women, well knowing that abstineny in that kind is both grievous and impossible. Yet are they to meddle with none but their own peculiars : the offending Women they drown, and the men they garish. They buy their Wives of their Parents, and record the Contract before the Cadi, which they afterward solemnize in this manner : Many Women are invited by the Mother of the Bride to accompany her the night before the Marriage-day, whereof they spend a great part in feasting ; then lead they her into a Bath, where they anoint and bathe her. So breaking company, they depart unto their several rests, and in the morning return to her Chamber : where they trick her in her richest Ornaments, tying on her silken Buskins with knots not easily unknot. The Bridegroom having feasted a number in like manner, in the morning they also repair to his house in their best Apparel, and gallantly mounted, from whence they set forward by two and two, to fetch home the Bride, accompanied with Musick, and conducted by the Sagdieb, who is the nearest of his Kindred. Unto whom the Bride is delivered with her face close covered : who set a-stride on Horse-back, hath a Canopy carried over her ; in such sort as no part of her is to be discerned. So the Troop returning in order as they came : after them are carried in Serpents (a kind of Baskets) their Presents and Apparel : then followeth she ; and lastly her Slaves, if any have been given her. The Bridegroom standeth at his door to receive her, who is honoured by his Guests (yet go they not in) with sundry Presents before their departure. If she be of Quality, she is led to the Bride-chamber by an Eunuch, where Women stand prepared to undress her. But the Bridegroom himself must untie her Buskins (as among the Romans they did their Girdles) to which he is fain to apply his teeth. Now he is to entertain his Wives with an equal respect : alike is their Diet, alike is their Apparel, alike is his Benevolence (for such sweet stuff is contained in the Precepts of their Doctors) unless they consent to give or change turns, or else they may complain to the Cadi, and procure a Divorcement. But the Husband may put away his Wife at his pleasure : who may marry unto another within four months after, provided she prove not with Child, and then not until so long after her delivery. But if he will have her again, he must buy her : and if after the third Divorce, another is fust to lie with her, as a punishment inflicted for his levity. They give him the reverence of a Master ; they are at no time to deny him their embraces whom he toucheth not again, until they have been at the Banias. They receive chastisement from him, and that they hold to be an argument of his affection. They feed apart, and inter-meddle not with Household-affairs. All that is required at their hands, is to content their Husbands, to nurse their own Children, and to live peaceably together : which they do (and which is strange) with no great jealousy or envy. No male accompanies them above twelve years old, except they be Eunuchs, and so strictly are they guarded, as seldom seen to look out at their doors. They be Women of elegant Beauties

for

for the most part ruddy, clear, and smooth, as the polished Ivory ; being never ruffled by the weather, and daily frequenting the Bannias ; but withal by the self-same means they suddenly wither. Great eyes they have in principal repute, affected both by the Turky and the Grecians, as it should seem from the beginning. For Mahomet doth promise Women with such, (nay as big as Eggs) in his imaginary Paradise : which Homer attributes, as an especial excellency, unto Juno :

—To whom replies

Adoreth Juno with the Cowes fair eyes.

Huic respondit postea bovinos oculos habens

Veneranda Juno.

Hom. Iliad. 1.

And again,

The great eye'd Juno smil'd.

—Risit autem magnis oculis veneranda Juno;

Iliad. 1.

And of those the blacker they be, the more amiable : inasmuch that they put between the eye-lids and the eye a certain black powder with a fine long Pencil, made of a Mineral brought from the Kingdom of Pez, and called Alcobole ; which by the not disgraceful staining of the lids, do better set forth the whiteness of the eye, and though it trouble for a time, yet it comforteth the sight, and repelleth all humours. Into the same hue (but likely they naturally are so) do they die their eye-brows and eye-brows : (the latter by Art made high, half-circular, and to meet, if naturally they do not) so do they the hair of their head :

And led a more fair flowing
In black hair loosely flowing.

Leda fuit nigra conspicienda coma.
Ovid. Am. l. 2. Eleg. 4.

as a foil that maketh the white seem whiter, and more becoming their other perfections. They part it before in the middle, and plate it behind, yet sometimes wearing it dishevelled. They paint their Nails with a yellowish red. They wear on the top of their heads a Cap not unlike the top of a Sugar-loaf, yet a little flat, of Paste-board, and covered with Cloth of Silver or Tissue. Their Under-garments (which within doors are their upper-most) do little differ from those that be worn by the men, which we have presented to the eye to avoid repetition.

The better sort about the upper part of their Arms and smalls of their Legs wear Bracelets, and are elsewhere adorned with Jewels. When they go abroad they wear over all long Gowns of Violet-cloth or Scarlet, tyed close before, the large Sleeves hanging over their hands; having Buskins on their Legs, and their Heads and Faces to be named in fine Linen, that no more is to be seen of them than their Eyes: nor that of men, who look as through the sight of a Beaver. For they are forbidden by the Alcoran to disclose their beauties unto any but unto their Fathers and Husbands. They never stir forth, but (and then always in Troops) to pray at the Graves, and to the publick Bannias, which for excellency of buildings are next to their Mosques. But having in part already described some of their forms, I will a little treat of their uses which have been in times past, and are at this present in such request with these Nations (as once with the Romans, as may appear by their regardable ruins) that few but frequent them twice in the week, as well for their health, as for delight and cleanliness. For the stomachs crudity proceeding from their usual eating of fruits and drinking of water, is thereby concocted; which also after exercise and travel restoreth to the wearied body a wonderful alacrity.

*Pœna tamen præfens, cum tu deponis amictus
Turgidus, & crudum pavonem in balnea portas.
Iunc subitæ mortes, atque incitata senectus.
Juv. Sat. 1.*

*To punish straits, if you disrobe'd, and fall
To the Bath do undigested wounds bring.
Hence sudden deaths, and age incitate spring.*

The men take them up in the morning, and in the afternoon the Women. But both amongst the Romans did ordinarily frequent them together: a custom, as they say, continued in Switzerland at this day, and that among the most modest. The men are attended upon by men, and the Women by Women. In the outer-most room they put off their cloaths, then having Aprons of stained Linen tyed about their Waists, they enter the Baths to what degree of heat they please: for several rooms, and several parts of them are of several temperatures, as is the water let in by Cocks to wash the sweat and filth of the body. The Servitors wash them, rub them, stretch out their joynts, and cleanse their skins with a piece of rough Grogoram: which done, they shave the heads and bodies of men, or take away the hair with a compulsion of Rufina (a Mineral of Cyprus) and unbleak Lime: who returning to the place where they left their cloaths, are dried with fresh linnen, and for all this they pay not above three or four Aspers, so little, in that ended with Revenues by their Founders. But the Women do anoint their bodies with an Oyntment made of the Earth of Chios, which maketh the skin soft, white, and shining, extending that on the face, and freeing it from wrinkles. Much unnatural and filthy lust is said to be committed daily in the remote Closets of these darksome Bannias, yea Women with Women; a thing incredible, if former times had not given therunto both detection and punishment. They have generally the sweetest Children that ever I saw, partly proceeding from their frequent bathings and affected cleanliness. As we bear ours, in our arm, so they do theirs attired on their shoulders.

Now next to their Wives, we may speak of their Slaves: for little difference is there made between them, who are Christians taken in the Wars, or purchased with their money. Of these there are weekly Markets in the City, where they are to be sold as Horses in Fairs; the men being rated according to their faculties or personal abilities, as the Women for their youths and beauties, who are set out in best becoming attires, and with their aspects of pity and affection endeavour to allure the Christians to buy them, expecting from them a more easie servitude and continuance of Religion: when being thrall to the Turk, they are often enforced to renounce it for their better entertainment. Of them there be many of excellent outward perfection: and when the buyer hath agreed of the price (but yet conditionally) they are carried aside into a Room. And as those,

W 50

*Who Horses cheapen, search them, and make proof,
Left a good shape, profit by a tender hoof;
Cheat him that should air-circumpectly buy
For that short-beaded, broad-bread, crested high.*

*Ubi equos mercantur apertos
Inspiciunt, ne si facies, ut sæpe, decora
Moli fulva pede est, emporum inducat hiantem
Quod pulchre clunes, breve quod caput, ardua cervix.
Hor. Serm. 1. Sat. 2.*

So,

*To assure you of deceitful wares they shew
All that they sell; nor boast they of the best,
Nor hide the bad, but both give to the rest.*

*—quod merces sine furis gestat aperce
Quod venale habet offendit, nec si quid honesti est,
Jactat, habetque palam, quærit quo turpia celet.
Idem.*

even to the search of her mouth, and assurance (if so be he said to be) of her Virginity. Their Masters may lie with them, chastise them, exchange and sell them at their pleasure. But a Christian will not lightly sell her whom he hath lye with, but give her her liberty. If any of their Slaves will become Mahometans, they are discharged of their bondage; but if a Slave be a Turk, he only is the better intreated. The Turks do use their bond-men with little less respect than their Wives, and make no difference between the Children begotten of the one or the other: who live together without jealousy, it being allowed by their irreligious Religion: notwithstanding their Wives do only receive, as proper unto them, their Sabbaths benevolence. The old and the most deformed are put to the most drudgery. The men-slaves may compel their Masters before the Cadie, to limit the time of their bondage, or set a price of their redemption, or else to sell them unto another; but whether of the two, they lightly refer to the Slaves election. If they be only fit for labour, they will accept of the time; but if skillful in any craft, of the price: which expired or paid, they may return into their Countries. But Gilly-slaves are seldom released, in regard of their small number, and much employment which they have for them: nor those that are Slaves unto great ones, to whom the Cadies authority extends not. Many of the Children that the Turks do buy (for their Markets do afford of all ages) they castrate, making all smooth as the back of the hand, (whereof divers do dye in the cutting) who supply the uses of nature with a silver Quill, which they wear in their Turbants. In times past, they only did but geld them; but being admitted to the free converse of their Women, it was observed by some, that they more than besittingly delighted in their Societies: For according to the Satyre.

*With feeble Eunuchs some delighted are:
Kisser still soft, Chast that of beards despair:
Who need force no abortions.*

*Sunt quos Eunuchi imbelles & mollia semper
Oscula delectant, & desperato barba,
Et quod abortivo non est opus.
Juv. Sat. 6.*

But others say, that Selymus the Second, having seen a Gelding cover a Mare, brought in among them that inhumane customs. The first that ever made Eunuch, was Scmiramus. They are here in great repute with their Masters, trusted with their states, the government of their women and houses in their absence, having for the most part been approved faithful, wise, and courageous; inasmuch as not a few of them have come to sit at the Stern of State, (the second Vizier of the Port being now an Eunuch) and others to the government of Armies.

But now speak we of their Funerals. After their death, the men by the men, and the women by the women are laid out in the middle of the room. When divers of their Priests do assemble, and having performed certain idle Ceremonies, (as in wrapping their Beads about it, and in the often turning it, invoking God to have mercy on the departed) they wash it, shave it, and throw it in linen, which they have untied both at hand and feet. Then lay they the Corse on a Bier, placing a Turbant at the upper end, and carry it to the Grave, with the head forward: some of the Dervises going before with Tapers, the Priest lining after; and lastly his friends and acquaintance. But persons of principal quality have their horses led before them, with Ensigns trailed on the earth, and other Rites of that nature, divers of the Santons going before, naming of God, and shaking of their heads, and turning about until they fall down giddy. The sides and bottom of the grave are boarded, and a board laid over the Corse to keep the earth from it, leaving a sufficient compass to kneel in. For they are of opinion, that two terrible Angels called Mongir and Gudequir, do presently repair unto the grave, and put the soul again into the body, as if (saith the Alcoran)

Alcoran) a man should put on a shirt, and raising him on his knees, with his head uncovered, (the winding-sheet being left unknot for that purpose) demand of him in particular how he hath behaved himself in this life: which if not well, the one strikes him on the head with a hammer nine fathoms into the earth, the other tearing him with an Iron hook; and so continue to torment him until the day of Judgment. A Purgatory so feared, that in their Matins they petition God to deliver them from the examinations of the Black Angels, the tortures of the grave, and their evil journey. But if he have satisfied them in his reply, they vanish away, and two white Angels come in their places, the one laying his arm under his head, the other sitting at his feet, and so protect him until Dooms-day. The Emperours, and some of the great Bassas (whereof we have spoken sufficiently before) have their particular Mausoleums. Those of a second condition are buried in their Gardens in Sepulchres without covers, filled within above the cover with earth, and set with varieties of flowers, according to the custom of the Pythagoreans, and universal wishes of the Etnicks.

*Dii majorum umbris tenuem & sine pondere terram
Spiranteque crocos, & in urna perpetuum tui.
Persius.* Agne Sultani. ubi: g'

*Lie earth light on their bones, may their graves bear
Fresh fragrant flowers: let spring-side still live there.*

they being (as they thought) sensible of burdens, and delighted with favours, or with the honour therein done them. But the common sort are buried by the high-way sides, and fields of most frequency, adjoining to the City, having a stone of white Marble more than a foot broad, four feet high, ingraven with Turkish Characters, erected at the head, and another at the feet, the grave between lying like a Trough. To these the Women flock every Thursday in multitudes, weeping over their Children, Husbands, Kinsfolks, and dead Progenitors, often kissing the stones, and praying for their delivery from the afore-said black tortures: many times leaving bread and meat on their graves (a custom also of the Pagans) for Dogs and Birds to devour, as well as to relieve the poor, being held an available alms for the deceased. The better sort do mourn in white (as for black, I never saw it worn by a Turk) and but for a little season. And the Women are not to marry by their Law, until four months and ten days after the deaths of their Husbands.

To speak a word or two of their Sciences and Trades: some of them have some little knowledge in Philosophy. Necessity hath taught them Physics, rather had from experience than the grounds of Art. In Astronomy they have some insight, and many there are that undertake to tell Fortunes. These frequently sit in the streets of the City, resorted unto by such as are to take a journey, or go about any business of importance. They have a good gift in Poetry, wherein they chant their Amours in the Persian Tongue to vile Mulick, yet are they forbidden so to do by their Law, Gitters, Harps, and Recorders being their principal Instruments. But their loud Instruments do rather affright than delight the hearing. On a time the Grand Signior was persuaded to hear some choice Italian Mulick; but the foolish Musicians (whose wit lay only in the ends of their fingers) spent so much time in unseasonable tuning, that he commanded them to avoid, belike esteeming the rest to be answerable. They study not Rhetorick, as sufficiently therein instructed by Nature; nor Logic, since it serves as well to delude as inform, and that wisdom (according to the opinion of the Epicures) may be comprehended in plain and direct expressions. Some there be amongst them that write Histories, but few read them, thinking that none can write of times past truly, since none dare write the truth of the present. Printing they reject, perhaps for fear lest the universality of learning should subvert their false grounded Religion and Policy, which is better preserved by an ignorant obedience: moreover, a number that live by writing, should be undone, who are, for the most part, of the Priesthood. The Turkish Tongue is lofty in sound, but poor of it self in substance: for being originally the Tartarian, who were needy ignorant Pastors, they were constrained to borrow their terms of State and Office from the Persians, (upon whose ruins they erected their greatness) of Religion (being formerly Pagans) from the Arabs, as they did of the Maritime names (together with their skill) from the Greeks and Italians. In Natolia it is most generally spoken. They use (as the Persians) the Arabick Character. In writing they leave out the Vowels, unless it be in the end of a word, so that much is contrived in a little room. They curiously seek their Paper, which is thick, much of it being coloured and dappled like Chamblets, done by a trick they have have in dipping it in the water. They have Painters amongst them, exquisite in their kind, (for they are not to draw by their Law, nor to have the figure of any thing living) yet now many privately begin to infringe that Precept; and the Grand Signior himself hath a Fan, whereon the Battels of Hungary are painted. Colours also they have, no less fair than durable. Every one hath some Trade or other, not so much as the Grand Signior excepted. Their Trades are lightly such as serve for their own uses, neither much supplying foreign Markets, nor frequenting them. A lazy people that work but by fits, and more esteem of their ease, than their profit, yet are they excessive covetous. And although they have not the wit to deceive (for they be gross-headed) yet have they the will, breaking all compacts with the Christians that they find discommodious: so that they seldom will deal with them. But with one another they buy and sell only for ready money, wherein the most of their substance consisteth, the occasion that few Suits do happen amongst them. I have spoken sufficiently, at least what I can, of this Nation in general: now convert we to the Person and Court of this Sultan.

He is, in this year 1610. about the age of three and twenty, strongly limbed, and of a just stature, yet greatly inclined to be fat: inasmuch as sometimes he is ready to choke as he feeds, and some do purposely attend to free him from danger. His face is full and duly proportioned: only his eyes are extraordinary great, by them esteemed (as is said before) an excellency in beauty. Flegm hath the predominancy in his complexion. He hath a little hair on his upper lip, but less on his chin, of a darkish colour. His aspect is as haughty as his Empire is large. He beginneth already to abstain from exercise: yet are there Pillars with inscriptions in his Seraglio, between which he threw a great Iron Maze, that memorizeth both his strength and activity. Being on a time rebuked by his Father Mahomet, that he neglected so much his exercises and studies, he made this reply: that, now he was too old to begin to learn; intimating thereby, that his life was to determine with his Fathers, whereat the Sultan wept bitterly. For he then had two Elder Brothers, of whom the Eldest was strangled in the presence of his Father upon a false suspicion of Treason; and the other by a natural death did open his way to the Empire. Perhaps the consideration thereof that made him keep his younger Brother alive, contrary to their cruel custom, but strongly guarded, and kept within his Seraglio. For he is of no bloody disposition, nor otherwise notoriously vicious, considering the austerity of that Government, and immunities of their Religion. Yet he is an unrelenting punisher of offences, even in his own Household: having caused eight of his Pages, at my being there, to be thrown into the Sea for Sodomy (an ordinary crime, if esteemed a crime, in that Nation) in the night time; being let to know by the report of a Cannon, that his will was fulfilled. Amongst whom it was given out, that the Viceroy's natural Son of Sicilia was one (a Youth lately taken Prisoner, and presented unto him) yet but so laid to be, to dishearten such as should practise his escape. His Valour rests yet untried, having made no War but by disposition: nor is it thought that he greatly affects it, despairing of long life in regard of his corpulency. Whereupon he is now building a magnificent Mosque, for the health of his Soul, all of white Marble; at the East-end and South-side of the Hippodrom; where he first broke the earth, and wrought three hours in person. The like did the Bassas: bringing with them Presents of Money and Slaves to further the Building. His occupation (for they are all tied to have one) is the making of Ivory Rings, which they wear on their Thumbs when they shoot, whereupon he works daily. His Turbant is like in shape to a Pompon, but thrice as great. His under and upper garments are lightly of white Satin, or Cloth of Silver stifled with an eye of green, and wrought in great branches. He hath not so few as four thousand persons that feed and live within his Seraglio; besides Capagies, of whom there are five hundred attired like Janizaries, but only that they want the Socket in the front of the Bonnets, who wait by fifties at every Gate. The chief Officers of the Court are the Master (as we may term him) of the Requests, the Treasurer and Steward of his Household, his Cup-bearer, the Agas of the Women, the Controulleur of the Jemagians: who also steereth his Barge, and is the principal Gardiner. Divers of these Jemagians marching before the Grand Signior at solemn Shows, in a vain ostentation of what they will undergo for their Lord, gathering up the skin of their Temples, do thrust quills through, and stick therein feathers for a greater bravery: so wear they them to their no small trouble, until the place putteth; and some, when the old breaks out, make new holes close to the broken. Yea the Standard-bearers of this cue, thrust the slaves sometimes of their Standards thorow the skin and fat of their bellies, retting the lower end on a Stirrup of Leather, and so bear them thorow the City. Fifty Mutes he hath born deaf and dumb, whereof some few be his daily Companions, the rest are his Pages. It is a wonderful thing to see how readily they can apprehend and relate by signs, even matters of great difficulty. Not to speak of the multitude of Eunuchs, the Foot-men of his Guard, Cooks, Sherbet-men (who make the foreshaid Beverage) Gardeners, and Horfe-keepers: we now will treat of his Women; wherein we will include those as well without as within his Seraglio.

And first begin we with his Virgins, of whom there are seldom so few as five hundred, kept in a Seraglio by themselves, and attended on only by Women, and Eunuchs. They all of them are his Slaves, either taken in the Wars, or from their Christian Parents, and are indeed the choicest Beauties of the Empire. They are not to be presented to the Emperor, until certain months be expired after their entrance; in which time they are purged and dieted, according to the custom of the ancient Persians. When it is his pleasure to have one, they stand rankt in a Gallery, and the prepared for his Bed, to whom he giveth his Handkercher: who is delivered to the aforesaid Age of the Women (a Negro Eunuch) and conducted by him into the Sultan's Seraglio. She that beareth him the first Son, is honoured with the title of Sultana. But for all his multitude of Women, he hath yet begotten but two Sons and three Daughters, though he be that way unfatigably given, (perhaps the cause that he hath so few) and useth all sorts of food that may enable performance. He cannot make a free Woman his Concubine, nor have to do with her whom he hath freed, unless he do marry her. This was well known to the wickedly witted Roxelana: who pretending devotion, and desirous for the health, forsooth, of her Soul to erect a Temple, with an Hospital; imparting her mind to the Mufti, was told by him, that it would not be acceptable to God, if built by a Bond-woman. Whereupon the put on a habit of a counterfeit sorrow; which posselt the doting Solyman with such a compassion, that he forthwith gave her her freedom, that the might pursue her intention. But having after a while sent for her by an Eunuch, he cunningly excused her not coming, as touched in conscience with the unlawfulness of the fact, now being free, and therefore not to consent unto his pleasure. So he, whose soul did abide in her, and not able to live without her, was constrained to marry her. The only mark that she aimed at, and whereon she grounded her succeeding Tragedies. This also hath married his Concubine, the Mother of her younger Son, (the being dead by whom he had the eldest) who with all the practices of a politick Step-dame, endeavours to settle the succession on her own: adding, as it is thought, the power of Witchcraft to that of her beauty, she being passionately beloved of the Sultan. Yet is she called Cafek Cadon, which is, the Lady without hair: by Nature her self, both graced and shamed. Now when the Sultan dyeth, all his Women are carried into another Seraglio; where those remain that were his Predecessors, being there both strictly lookt unto, and liberally provided for. The Grand Signior not seldom bestowing some of them (as of his Virgins, and the Women of his own Seraglio) upon his great Bassas and others, which is accounted a principal honour. But for his Daughters, Sisters, and Aunts, they have the Bassas given them for their Husbands, the Sultan saying thus, Here, Sister, I give thee this man to thy slave, together with this Dagger, that if he please thee not thou mayst kill him. Their Husbands come not unto them until they be called: if but for speech only, their shoes which they put off at the door, are there suffered to remain: but if to lye with them, they are laid over the Bed by an Eunuch, a sign for them to approach; who creep in unto them at the Beds feet. Mutapha and Hadir (two of the Vissers of the Port) have married this Sultans Sister and Niece, and Mahomet Bassa of Cairo, his Daughter: a Child of six years old, and he about fifty, having had Presents sent him according to the Turkish Solemnities, who give two hundred thousand Sultanies in Dowry. Not much in habit do the Women of the Seraglio differ from other, but that the Favourite wears the ornament of her head more high, and of a particular fashion, of beaten gold, and inched with Gems; from the top whereof there hangeth a Veil that reacheth to her Ankles: the rest have their Bonnets more depressed, yet rich, with their hair dishevelled.

When the Sultan entertaineth Embassadors, he sitteth in a Room of white Marble, glistering with Gold and Stones, upon a low Throne, spread with curious Carpets,

Carpets, and accommodated with Cushions of admirable workmanship; the Bassas of the Bench being by, who stand like to many Statues without speech or motion. It is now a custom that none do come into his presence without presents: first fastned upon his Bassas, as they say, by a Persian Embassador; who thereupon scit word to the Sophy his Master, that had conquered Turkie. The stranger that approacheth him is led between two: a custom observed ever since the first Amurath was slain by the Servian Cobleritz, a common Souldier, who in the overthrow of Cassana, rising from amongst the dead bodies, and reeling with his wounds, made towards the Sultan, then taking a view of the slain, as if he had something to say: by whom admitted to speech, he forthwith stab'd him with a Dagger hid under his Caskock for that purpose. They go backward from him, and never pull off their hats, the shewing of the head being held by the Turk, to be an extraordinary indecency. Now when he goeth abroad, which is lightly every other Friday (besides at other times, upon other occasions) unto the Mosque; and when in state, there is not in the World to be seen a greater spectacle of humane glory, and if (so I may speak) of sublimated manhood. For although, as hath been said, the Temple of Santa Sophia, which he most usually frequenteth, is not above a stoness cast from the out-moost Gate of the Seraglio, yet hath he not so few as a thousand Horfe (besides the Archers of his Guard and other Footmen) in that short procession: the way on each side inclosed as well within as without, with Capagies and Janizaries, in their Scarlet Gowns and particulare Head-ornaments. The Chisnes ride foremost with their gilded Maces, then the Captains of the Janizaries with their Age, next the Chieftains of the Spathies, after them the Sanziaks: those of the Souldiery wearing in the fronts of their Bonnets the feathers of the Bird of Paradise, brought out of Arabia, and by some esteemed the Phoenix. Then follow the Bassas and Beglerbegs, after them the Pretorian Footmen, called the Sulacchi, whereof there be in number three hundred. These are attired in Calicums and Sinoocks of Calico, wearing no more over them than half-sleeved Coats of Crimson Damask, their Skirts tucked under their Girdles, having Plumes of Feathers in the top of their copped Bonnets, bearing Quivers at their backs, with Bows ready bent in their left hands, and Arrows in their right, gliding along with a marvellous celerity. After them seven or nine goodly Horfes are led, having Caparisons and Trappings of inestimable value, followed by the idolized Sultan gallantly mounted. About whom they run forty Paichis, (so called, in that they are natural Persians) in high-crowned brimless Caps of beaten gold, with Coats of Cloth of gold girt to them with a Girdle called Chochiab: the Pages following in the Rear, and other Officers of the Household. But what most deterveth admiration amongst so great a concourse of people, is their general silence: inasmuch as had you but only ears, you might suppose (except when they salute him with a short and soft murmur) that men were then folded in sleep, and the World in midnight. He that brings him good news (as unto others of inferiour condition) receiveth his reward, which they call Musto-looke. But this Sultan, to avoid abuses in that kind, doth forthwith commit them to Prison, until their reports be found true or false, and then rewards or punisheth accordingly. Although he spends most of his time with his Women, yet sometimes he recreates himself in Hawking: who for that purpose hath (I dare not name) how many thousand Faulknors in pension, dispersed throughout his Dominions, and many of them ever attendant. Their long-winged Hawks they whistle not off as we do; but putting a bridle about their necks, they make them couch to their fits, and go galloping to the Brook, fling them off at the Fowl, being reared suddenly by the noise of a Drum that hangs at their Pammels, by use made cunning in that kind of preying. They carry them on the right hand. A hardy Hawk is highly esteemed; and they have a kind of them called Spahans, much less than a Falcon; yet so strangely courageous, that nothing flyeth in the Air that they will not bind with. They also hawk at the field, for I have seen them carry Spaniels with them, yet those in beauty not like unto ours, but of a baltard generation. They feed their Hawks with hard Eggs when flesh is wanting, and seldom bestow of them the mew-ings. The old World, as is thought, was ignorant of this sport: being rarely, if mentioned, by any ancient Author; so that said by some to have been invented by Frederick Barbarossa, during the time that he beleaguered Rome with his Army. But this Dilitch of Martins doth confute that opinion.

*Prædo fuit volucrum, famulus nunc aucupis idem
Decipit, & captas non sibi meret aves.*

The thief of fowl, the fowlers thief, now makes Her mune, that she fowl for another takes.

Although he affects not Hunting, yet he entertains a number of Huntsmen. Their Dogs they let go out of Ships in pursuit of the Wolf, the Stag, the Bore, the Leopard, &c. Those that serve for that purpose are fickle haired, and not unlike the Iris Gray-hounds.

Now the yearly Revenue which he hath to defray his excessive disbursements, such a world of people depending upon him, amounts not to above fifteen millions of Sultanies, (besides the entertainment for his Timariot) which is no great matter, considering the amplitude of his Dominions, being possessor of two Empires, above twenty Kingdoms, besides divers rich and populous Cities; together with the Red, above the Mid-land, the Ægean, Euxine, and Propontick Seas. But it may be imputed to the barbarous wars of the Turkish Conquests, who depopulate whole Countries, and never recede in what they ruin. So that a great part of his Empire is but thinly inhabited, (I except the Cities) and that for the most part by Christians, whose poverty is their only safety and protection. But his casual incomes do give a main accession to his Treasury; as Taxes, Customs, Spoils, and Extortions. For as in the Sea the greater fishes do feed on the less, so do the Great ones here on their inferiours, and he on them all: being, as aforesaid, the Commander of their lives, and general Heir of their substances. He hath divers Mines of Gold and Silver within his Dominion: that of Siliderocassa in Macedon having been as beneficial unto him as the largest City of his Empire, called anciently Chryseis: and not unknown to Philip the Father of Alexander, who had the gold from thence wherewith he coined his Philips, as also from those of Cranider, from whence he yearly extracted a thousand Talents. He hath only two forts of Coyn, the Sultanie and Asper. The Sultanie is equal in value to the Venice Zeceene, and sixscore Aspers amount to a Sultanie, called rather Aspro, of the whiteness thereof, in that consisting of silver.

Constantinople is said to contain seven hundred thousand persons: half of them Turks, and the other half Jews and Christians, and those for the general, Grecians. But Pera hath three Christians for one Mohometan: for no Jew dwells in Pera, though they have their shops there. We omit to speak of the Jews, until we come into Jewry, and now will bend our discourse to the Grecians: a Nation no less scattered than they, but infinitely more populous. For not only three parts of the Inhabitants of all Greece and Romania are Grecians, but almost all that dwell in the Islands of the Mid-land Sea, Propontis and Ægeum. Infinite numbers there are of them both in the Less and the Greater Asia, and in Africa not a few. For (besides divers Colonies by them formerly planted) when Antipater, Perdicus, Selenus, Lysimachus, Antigonus, Pholony, and the rest of the Successors of Alexander had shared his Empire among them, they endeavoured as much as they could to plant his new-got Kingdoms with their Countrymen, whose posterity in that part remaineth to this day, (though vassal'd to the often changes of foreign Governments: supplied by the extension of the latter Greek Empire who yet retain wheresoever they live, their Name, their Religion, and particular Language. A Nation once so excellent, that their precepts and examples do still remain as approved Canons to direct the mind that endeavoureth virtue. Admirable in Arts, and glorious in Arms; famous for Government, affectors of freedom, every way noble: and to whom the rest of the World were reputed Barbarians. But now their knowledge is converted, as I may say, into affected ignorance, (for they have no Schools of Learning amongst them) their liberty into contented slavery, having lost their minds with their Empire. For so base they are, as thought it is, that they had rather remain as they be, than endure a temporary trouble by prevailing succours, and would with the Israhelites repine at their deliverers. Long after the loss of their other virtues they retained their indolence:

*Ingenium velox, audacia perdita, sermo
Promptus, & laxo torrenior: ede quid illum
Esse putes, quemvis hominum secum attulit ad nos:
Grammaticus, Rhetor, Geometres, Pistor, Alpites,
Augur, Schenobates, Medicus, Reges; omnia novit
Græculus elurians in cælestium iustitias, ibet.*

Juv. Sat. 3.

*Quick-witted, wondrous bold, well spoken, than Iseus swifter; tell, who all men
Brought with himself: Sooth-sayer, a Physician,
Magician, Rhetorician, Geometrician,
Grammarian, Painter, Rope-walker. All knows
The needy Greek: bid go to heaven, he goes.*

But

But now they delight in ease, in shades, in dancing and drinking; and no further for the most part endeavour their profit, than their bellies compel them. They are generally taxed by the stranger Christians of perfidiousness, inasmuch as it is grown into a Proverb, Chi fida in Greco, fara intrigo, in them more antiently noted.

By others beads the Grecians were Left prone themselves than to forswear.

— Nondum Græcis jurare paratis Per caput alterius. Juv. Sat. 6.

An Oath in use at this day, as it is with the Turks when he most desireth to be believed. Nor will they themselves truit any: wherof comes that other Proverb,

To trade with Grecian trust.

Mercari Græca fide.

which is not to part with their wares without money. There be divers rich men of them in Pera, but those I think were descended of the Genoffs, who were, as hath been said, the owners of that City. Many of them exercise merchandize in Vessels and Carmals, and have of late gotten the use of the Compass, yet dare they not adventure unto the Ocean. They are of divers Trades in Cities, and in the Country to till the earth (for the European Turks do little meddle with Husbandry) and dress their Vines, by them only planted. They have a ceremony of baptizing of their Wives, which is the reason that the Jews will not drink thereof: performed in the memory, and on that day wherein Christ converted Water into Wine: the Priest in the midst of his orations pouring thereinto a small quantity of water. Their ancient habits may be conceived by that description of Homer,

*He putteth on a coat, fine, fair, and new,
When ever that an ample Cloak he throw,
And ties to his feet gay shoes.*

*— mollem autem induit tunicam,
Pulchram, novam, circa autem magnum jecit pallium.
Pedibus autem sub teneris ligavit pulchra calcemæna.*

Il. lib.

Wearing their hair long, being frequently called by him

The long hair'd Greek.

Adhivi comati.

But now both in cut and attire they do in most things agree with the people whom they live under, like the Venetians in the Venitian territories, and like Turks in Turkie, as also in their manners. The half sleeved Gown of Violet cloth, with Bonnets of the same, or divers coloured Staphes, is here most appropriate unto them: but the Greek Genoffs in Pera wear their Gowns black, and of richer stuffs, with Velvet Caps, not unlike unto those that were in fashion amongst us. The antique Grecians used to lie along at their meals, from whom the Romans received that custom, as they from the eastern Assians, upon Beds that circled three parts of the Table, which was round and low, (the waters standing in the vacant part and behind them) leaning on their elbows raised with Pillows, in their seatings crowned with chaplets of Flowers, and garlands of Laurel: but the women did sit when admitted, which was rarely amongst them, nor them to lie along, esteemed too provokingly lascivious. The number of the convivals at private entertainments exceeded not nine, nor were under three, proportionating themselves unto the Græces and Misæes. And as it should seem, they drank in that manner,

*— To three or nine
Fill bowls bestowing full of Wine.
Let ravish'd Poets drink thrice three,
Of whom the uneven Musæ be Below'd. The Grace mis-doubting jars,
Link to her naked Sisters, bars
Drangles that exceed their number.*

*— tribus aut novem
Miserant cyathis pocula commodis.
Qui Musæ amat impares,
Ternos tres cyathos æconitus petit
Vates, tres prohibet supra
Rixarum metuens tangere Gratia.
Nudis juncta fororibus.*

Horat. l. 3. Od. 19.

To which add that Greek Proverb,

*Drink three, or three thrice told,
A mystick Law of old.*

Ter bibe, vel toties ternos, sic mystica lex est.

G

Together

Together with their fong,

Aut quinque bibe, aut tres, aut non quatuor.

Three drink, if more's
Five, but not four.

Of their first cups they shed a little on the Table, as an offering to some of the gods, whom they desired to be propitious, as they did of the rest in the honour of their friends particular named; drinking small draughts at the beginning, until they arrived at the height of intemperancy; and sometimes as many together, as there were letters contained in the names of their Mistresses,

Navia sex eyathis, septem Justina bibatur,
Quinque Lycas Lyde quatuor, Ida tribus.
Mart. Epig. l. i. ep. 27.

Six healths to Navia drink, seven to Justina,
To Lycas five, to Lyde four, and three to Ida.

informuch that those were proverbially said to Greek it, that quaff in that fashion. At these, but more temperate drinkings, wherein they consumed most of the night, the chiefest sort consulted of matters of State; as appeareth by Nestors advice to Agamemnon,

Præbe convivium senibus, decet te, nec indicens est:
Plena tibi vino tentoria, quod naves Achivorum
Quotidianæ ex Thracia per latum pontum advehunt.
Omnis tibi est commoditas excipiendi multosq; imperas,
Multis autem congregatis, illi obediens qui optimum
Conflum confulerit.

Faith thou the Ancient, if it best fits thy place:
With Wine by Greek Ships daily brought from Thy Tents abound. Provision at hand (Thrace,
Of all sorts hast thou, and men at command
Many assembled so, amongst the rest,
His counsel follow that adviseth best:

Il. I.

and the grave discoursed of Philosophy; but of such as was pleasant as well as profitable and delightful unto the hearers, as may appear by Plato's convivium, and Plutarch's Sympoticks: the first named dying at such a Banquet, in the four-score and one year of his age, and on the seventh of November, which was also his birth day. And although the Greeks do now for the most part imitate the Turks, (I mean here in Turkie) in fitting at their meat, yet retain they still that vice of immoderate drinking. They pledge one another in order, and he that calls for Wine out of his turn, is reputed uncivil. Their Glasses are little, but at every draught emptied, and when they have once drunk hard, they observe no rule, but provoke one another to excesses. Never silent, and ever and anon kissing those that sit next them on the cheek and fore-head; and so likewise they do in their salutations after a long absence, and to those to whom they would give an assurance of their good will. Used of long, as appeareth by the Scriptures amongst these Eastern Nations. But to kiss their women is an unsufferable wrong, unless it be between the Resurrection and Ascension; using also this greeting, that, Our Saviour is risen. The women for the most part are brown of complexion, but exceedingly well-favoured and excessively amorous. Their garments differ little from theirs amongst whom they live; yet have they in Pera this particular fashion. * They cover not their faces (the Virgins excepted) unless it be with painting, using all the supplement of a sophisticated beauty, and not without cause; for when they grow old, they grow most contemptible, being put to do the drudgery of the house, and many times to wait on their Children. They are costly in their attire, and will complain to the Patriarch, if their husbands maintain them not according to their substances. The Greeks, as the Turks, do use little household-stuff, and lye upon Mattresses.

I need not to speak of the excellency of their Primitive language, excellent in regard of the Philosophy & liberal Sciences, together with the Divinity delivered therein, and excellent in it self, for the lofty sound, significant expressions, and genuine suavity, for which it grew in so much request amongst the Roman Dames, that they generally used it in their Court-ships, made thereby (as they thought) more graceful and amiable; whereof the Satyre thus exclaimeth,

Nam quid candidius, quam quod se non putet ulla
Formosa, nisi que de Thulca Gracula facta est:
Hoc sermone parent: hoc iram, gaudia, curas,
Hoc cuncta effundunt animi secreta, Quid ultra?

None be with their own beauties well afraid,
If of a Thulcan wit a Grecian made.
O groff! in Greek they fear, fret, joy deplore
In Greek all their souls secrets vent, What more?

Is

In Greek they couple. This to girls allow.
Greek yet use you, whom eighty six years bow,
Even unto death? In th'old 'tis impudence,
At oft as that light speech incites the sense,
My life, my soul.

Concumbunt Græce. Dones tamen illa puellis
Tunc etiam, quam sextus & octogessimus annus.
Pulsat adhuc Græce? Non est hic sermo pudicus
In vetula, quoties lascivum intervenit illud,

Zad & Jexh. Jew. Sat. 6,

This figure belongeth to the former page line 45, but could not be there placed.

But now the Greeks themselves (except some few) are ignorant therein, it being called the Latine Greek, and is a language peculiar to the learned. Yet the vulgar Greek doth not differ so far from the same, as the Italian from the Latine; corrupted not so much by the mixture of other tongues, as through a supine retchlessness. In some places they speak it more purely than in others. For the boys of Pera will laugh, when they hear the more barbarous dialect of other Maritime Greeks. And there be yet of the Laconians that speak so good Greek (though not grammatically) that they understand the learned, and understand not the vulgar. Their Liturgy is read in the ancient Greek, with not much more profit perhaps to the rude people, than the Latine Service of the Romish Church to the illiterate Papists.

They have four Patriarchs, one of Constantinople, another of Alexandria, the third of Jerusalem, and the fourth of Antioch. He of Constantinople hath under his jurisdiction all Peloponnesus, Greece, Thracia, Dacia, Mesfia, Macedonia, Epirus, Albania, Dalmatia, Illyria, a great part of Polonia, Russia, the Islands of the Adriatick Sea, and of the Archipelagus, with Candy, Rhodes, Cos, almost all the lesser Asia, Colebis, not a few that inhabit about the Fennus of Mania, and Northern shore of Euxinus, as Sicilia and Calabria were, until they turned to the See of Rome. Under the Patriarch of Alexandria are those of Egypt and Arabia. The Greeks of Palestine, and of the Countries thereabout, do obey the Patriarch of Jerusalem. And he of Antioch, who hath his seat in Damascus (for Antiochia is now desolate) hath subject unto him the Greeks of the lesser Armenia, Cilicia, Beritus, Tripoly, Alippo, and other places of the greater Asia. In all these parts they have the free exercise of their Religion, with publick Temples, and numbers of strong Monasteries. If a Patriarch dye, another is elected by a Synod of Bishops. But the Patriarch of Constantinople hath the supremacy of the rest assigned him by the Council of Chalcedon, as Metropolitan of the Imperial City, whose Diocesis exceedeth the other so much, in that most of those Northern Nations were won to Christianity by the industry of his predecessors, and reduced to their government. So if we do consider it, the Grecian Religion both in extent and number exceedeth the Roman. And as the Papists attribute an extraordinary holiness to Rome, so do the Greeks unto Athos, a Mountain of Macedonia; so named of Athos the son of Nepheue, deckt deckt with still flourishing Trees, and abounding with Fountains: called also, The Holy Mountain by the Christians. A place from the beginning dedicated to Religion: lying directly West from Lemnos, and to high, that though it be seven hundred furlongs distant, yet it is said a little before the setting of the Sun to cast a shadow on that Island. Whereupon the proverb:

Athos celat latera Lemniae bovis.

*Affiring Athos hides
The Lemnian Heifers sides.*

This stretcheth out into the Sea, and joins unto the Continent by an Isthmos about a mile and half broad: which was cut thorow by Xerxes (as hath been intimated before) and made circum-navigable. But time hath left now no impressions of his barbarous labour. It is well nigh three days journey in length, considering the difficulty of the way, and a half day over. The top thereof resembleth the form of a man, stretched on his back from West unto East; and formed (according to Strabo) to the similitude of Alexander. This Mountain is only inhabited by Grecian Monks, whom they call Coloieros, un-intermixed with the Laity; of whom there are these residing not so few as six thousand, that live in Monasteries strongly munit against the incursions of Robbers and Pirates. Of these there be in number twenty four. The Coloieros wear Gowns of black, of a homely stuff, with Hoods of the same; and the hair at full length. They never marry, abstain from flesh, and often (especially during their Lents) from Fish that hath blood in it. They live hardly, feeding on Bisket, Onions, Olives, Herbs, and such Fish as they take in the adjoining Seas. For they all of them labour for their subsistence, leaving their Monasteries betimes in the morning; and employing the day, some in Tillage, some in the Vineyards, some in making of Boats, some in fishing; others at home, Spin, Weave, Sew, and do all the offices that belong unto women; so that none but are busied about one thing or another, to the behoof of their particular Covents. And men they be that are only meet for such drudgeries. For amongst so many, not past three or four can write or read throughout a whole Monastery: inasmuch that at their Liturgies, that is read to them first, which they are to sing after. In these Monasteries many excellent manuscripts have been preserved; but those that now are, be only of Divinity, all other learning (as amongst the Turks) is at this day detested by the Religious. The Coloieros of this place have a repute above all others; and for their strictness of life, and observancy of ceremonies, are in their several Monasteries relieved from several Nations. The Patriarch of Constantinople is said to pay yearly to the Grand Signior, for the Priests and Coloieros that are under his jurisdiction, within the Turkish dominions, twelve thousand Sultanies.

The Patriarchs of Constantinople were heretofore men of singular gravity and learning, but now nothing less; rather chosen for temporal respects, than either for their knowledge or devotion: admitted not seldom to the place at the age of forty, though prohibited if under threescore, by an ancient Canon. Although elected by their own Bishops, yet are they often appointed, and ever to be allowed by the Grand Signior; frequently displaced, and banished unto Rhodes by the bribery of their successors. Some few of their Priests are learned. For them it is lawful to marry: but bigamy is forbidden them, and trigamy detested in the Laity. There are no other Orders amongst them, besides the aforesaid Coloieros, and certain Nuns, whom they call Coloieros. Yet of the last, but a few, who are for the most part poor old Widows, that exercise themselves in sweeping of the Churches, attending on the sick, and actions of like nature: Their Churches are many of them well set forth and painted with the representations of Saints; but they have no carved nor imbossed Images. Lamps they have continually burning. Their ordinary Liturgy is Saint Chrysostom's, but on festival days they do read Saint Basil's, and then are attired in their Pontificals. Their behaviour therein expresseth, to my understanding, no great either decency or devotion. They administer the Eucharist in both kinds: if the bread be not leavened, they think it not available, and they drink of the Cup very liberally. One Article they hold against the Catholic Creed; which is, that the Holy Ghost proceedeth only from the Father. Four Lents they have in the year, and then a damnable sin it is to eat flesh, or fish that hath blood in it (except in the Lent before Easter, when all sorts of fish may be eaten by the Laity;) but shell-fish they eat, and the Cuttle, whose blood, if I may so term it, is like Ink; a delicate food, and in great request. They fall on Wed-nedsdays,

nedsdays, Fridays, and on holy eves; but on Saturdays they feast, in regard that it was the old Sabbath. They compute the year as we do. They yield no supremacy to the Roman Papacy, but hold that Church for schismatical. And although many times out of the necessity of their affairs, and to purchase relief, they have treated of a reconciliation: and sometimes it hath been by their Agents concluded: yet what they have done, hath been generally rejected upon their return, both by the Greeks, and those other Nations that profess their Religion. Of their marriages I have elsewhere spoken, and now conclude we will with their Funerals; wherein they retain not a few of their ancient and heathen ceremonies. Of old the nearest in love or kindred laid their mouths unto theirs, to receive their last breath, and closed the eyes of the dying.

*His body (hers) she imbrac'd: and dismaid,
Between his lips, her cleaving soul convey'd
And with her dear hand clos'd his sightless eyes.*

*— sociosque amplectitur artus,
Harenqueq; animam non-tristis in ora maris
Transtillit, & clara prelit sua lumina dextra.
Stat. Silv. l. 5.*

Being dead, they washed their bodies with sweet Oyls, crowned them with garlands of flowers, and clothed them (as they now do) in their richest apparel; for fear, saith the Isotier Lucian, that they should take cold by the way, or be seen naked by Cerberus, decking their houses with branches of Cypress; a Tree designated to the dead; in that once being cut, it never flourisheth. So laying them upon their backs on beds, they conveyed them unto the funeral pile (as how unto the Grave) on Biers: but their lamentations are the time that they were, and beyond all civility. The women betimes in the morning do meet at appointed places, and then cry out mainly; beating of their breasts, tearing their hair, their faces and garments: And that the clamour may be the greater, they hire certain Jewish women

*Who Grecian woes wail with faint'd piety,
And at (not their own) funerals do cry.*

*— flit puerat dolores
Mygdonioque colunt, & non sua funera plorant.
Statius.*

that have lowdest voices, joining therewith the praises of the dead, from the hour of his Nativity, unto the hour of his dissolution; and keeping time with the melancholick music. The manner of their lamentings of old may appear by this ironical personating of the Father following the exequies of his Son, introduced by Lucian: O my sweet Son! thou art lost, thou art dead; dead before thy day, and hast left me behind, of men the most miserable. Not experienced in the pleasures of a Wife, the comfort of Children, Warfare, Husbandry; not attained to maturity. Henceforth, O my Son, thou shalt not eat, nor love, nor be drunk amongst thy equals. And although these Ethnick lamentations reproved in the Scripture were prohibited by the Athenian Law-giver, the Civil Law, and lastly by the Venetian within their Greek jurisdiction; yet still the Grecians do use them. Nor want they store of spectators; partly drawn hither to delight their eyes, and partly by jealousy. For then the choice and prime women of the City (if the deceased were of note) do afflict their obsequies, with bosoms displaid, and their hair disheveled; glad that they have the occasion to manifest their beauties, which at other times is secluded from admirers. The ancient Greeks wont to cut their locks, and cover the coasts therewith before they committed it to the fire: as in the Funeral of Patroclus.

*His corps with curls they covered,
Shorn from each mourning Princes head.*

Capilla autem totum mortuum tegebant quos injiciebant Tondentes. — Hom. Il. 23.

When Achilles,

*Apart the pile cuts his long yellow hair,
To Spergion vowed upon his bome repair.
Quoth he for that I never shall return
To my lov'd soil, I give thee to be born
By dear Patroclus to the dead. This said,
In his friends hand he his fair tresses laid.*

*Stans suorum a pyra flavam abscedit comam,
Quam Sperchio fluvio nutritae florecentem.
Dixit, quoniam non redibo amplius dilectam in patriam
Patroclo heroi prebeo alporundum.
Sic factus comam in manibus dilecti socii
Posuit. — Idem.*

And Lycurgus in that of his sons,

*His locks crop'd he, and therewith did bespread
There as he lay, the pale face of the dead.*

*Cæsarum ferro minuit, sedisque jaciente
Obnubuit tenuis ora comis.
Statius Theb. l. 6.*

They burnt with the body, if of principal regard, rich odours, Apparel, herds of Cattel, flocks of Sheep, Horses, Hounds, and sometimes the Concubines and Slaves whom they most respected, to supply their wants, to serve their delights, and attend upon them in the lower shades. And Achilles;

Duodecim etiam Trojanorum magnanimum filios fortes
Ferro mactavit; mala autem mente mediabatur operas;
Igne ignis robore projectum ferreum, ut depiscantur.
Hom. Il. l. 23.

Twelve Trojan youths of hopeful fortitude;
All high-born, stout; with savage thought ends'd:
And gave for food to the Iron force of Fire.

But to end with Papinius his description of that funeral fire, wherein the body of Archemorus was consumed, and appertaining solemnities.

Non unquam opulentior illo
Ante cinis; crepant gemmæ aque immane liquescit
Argentum & pitis exudat vestibus aurum.
Nec non Afflyris pinguefunt robora fucis,
Pallentique croco strident ardencia mella,
Spumantemq; mero patere verguntur, & atri
Sanguinis & rapti gratissima cymbia lactis.
Tunc septem numero turmas (centenus ubique Surgit eques) versis ducunt insignibus ipsi
Grajugæ reges, lustrantque ex more sinistro.
Orbe rogam, & stantes inclinant pulvere flammam;
Ter curvos egerit sinus, illisq; telis
Tela sonant, quater horrendum pepulere fragore
Arma, quater mollem famularum brachia plantum;
Semianimis alcer pecudes, spirantia & ignis
Accipit armenta, &c.

Stat. Theb. l. 6.

Never were ashes with more wealth replest;
Gems crackle, Silver melts, Gold drops with heat, Embroider'd Robes consume. Okes fam'd by
The juice of sweet Assyrian Gums, flame high.
Fir'd Honey and pale Saffron bifs, full bowls
Of Wine pour'd on; and goblets (gladd'ning souls)
Of black blood, and snatch'd milk, The Greek Kings then
With guidons trail'd on earth, led forth their men
In seven Bands, an hundred in each Band,
Who girt the pile, and move to the left hand;
Choking the flame with dust. Thrice is they round,
Their weapons clasp: four times a horrid sound
Struck armours rais'd; as oft the Servants raise Their bare breasts with out-cries. Herds of Neat,
And Beasts half slain, another woful fire
Devours, &c.

The reason why the Grecians did burn their dead, was because that part which was divine in them, should as it were in a fiery Chariot, again re-ascend to the celestial habitations; as unto earth the earthly returned. They used to quench the fire with red Wine, and gathering the bones together to include them in Urns, as the Urns in Sepulchres, (which had no title, unless they were slain in fighting for their Country) exhibiting Games, and prizes for the Victors in honour of the deceased. Notwithstanding all were not burnt, but some buried in their apparel, as now being Christians they are; who use extreme unction, as inducted by Saint James, yet not only deny the Roman opinion of purgatory; but furthermore, many amongst them erroneously maintain, that neither the souls of the blessed nor damned do suffer either joy or torment, or shall till the general Judgment. But enough of the Grecians.

The German Emperor, the Kings of England, and of France, have here their Leiger Ambassadors; as the Venetians their Bailly, and divers tributary Princes their Agents. Some merely employed about State-affairs; others together therewith, about the traffick of their Nations. But the English only negotiates for the Merchants, having two in the hundred upon every Ship, besides a large pension, with the name of a great proportion of provision from the Grand Signior. The English Consulship of Chios is in his disposing, and accountable to him; and out of that of Alexandria he hath no small share, though served by a French man. There hath been some contention between him and the French, about the protection of the Dutch Merchants; but now they do divide the profits. The English Consul of Aleppo is absolute of himself, yet hath from hence his redresses of injuries, whose chief employment is to protect the persons and goods of our Nation, to labour a revenge of wrongs, and a restitution of losses. And to give this no more than his due, for his place no man can be more sufficient; expert in their language, and by a long experience in their natures and practices, being moreover of such a spirit, as is not to be daunted. And surely his chiefest fault hath been his mis-fortune; in the too violent, chargeable, and successful soliciting of the restitution of the Prince of Moldavia, (whom adversity hath rather made crafty than honest) whose house doth harbour both him and his dependants, being open also to all of our Nation. A Sanctuary for poor Christian slaves that fiercely fly hither; whom he cautions to be conveyed into their Countries, and redeemeth not a few with his money. The

Western

Western Christians are called Franks, that are admitted to trade here; either of the name which signifieth free, or for that the French men were the first that had amity and traffick with the Infidels. They live freely, and plentifully, and many of them will not live alone where women are so easily come by. For besides the aforesaid markets, it is a use, not prohibited but only by our Religion, to purchase for their Concubines the beautiful daughters of the Grecians, wherewith the adjoining Islands are plentifully stored; sold by their parents at a rate; whereof they have half in hand, and the rest when they put them away, recording the contract in the Cadies book. These are to their Lovers exceeding obsequious; well knowing that at the second hand they shall be prized but as a worn garment. But death it is for a Christian to meddle with a Mahometan woman. And many times the treacherous Turks will practise to bring them into suspicion, that they may with their purses redeem the calumny. Practised of late between the Subassie of Galata an Italian Frier; whom the Lord Ambassador had received into his house upon the Consuls of Chios commendation, where I before had seen him. A man ignorant in learning, yet learned in the art of villany and dissimulation. Expulsed, as they say, at Constantinople from amongst their fraternity; coming down into Chios, he had insinuated himself into the knowledge of the Consul; professing how God in his mercy had opened his eyes, to behold the vanity and deceit of their Religion; and that now he would endeavour both with tongue and pen, as much as in him lay, to reduce the seduced from their errors. Who easily persuaded to believe, (a fault incident to the best natures) sent him up unto Constantinople, unto the Ambassadors, by (whom casting off the weeds of his Order) he was clothed anew, set at his Table, and supplied with money by a general contribution; where he preached every Sunday, at the least wittily; and so contested with the Franciscans that came to reconcile him, that the Ambassador, much contented therewith, sent intelligence of the same into England, with purpose to have sent him hither shortly after. But he whose only religion (as himself after confessed) was eating, drinking, and whoring; who thought he had exchanged for the greater liberty, finding the contrary, and that he was to go into a Country where his impudence would not only be discovered, but severely chastised, cast about for himself, and conspired with the Subassie, to bring certain Gentlemen that lay in the Ambassadors house, into a Garden, where divers women should have been placed of purpose; and so to have been taken amongst them. But failing in that project, he failed not in another. For in the house there was a Spaniard, of whom he informed the Subassie that he was a Spy, and secretly practised the escape of the Vice-roy's natural son of Silicia, agreeing for a certain reward to betray him. So having inticed him to walk amongst the Graves, upon a sign given, the Turks rushed in, and apprehended him, clogging him with chains, and intended to torture out of him a confession; whereof the Ambassador hearing, and expostulating the matter, the Subassie told him that he was a Spy, and discovered the Intelligencer: wherein being satisfied, and perhaps not unbribed, he granted his release. But a heavy reckoning befel the Frier, that suspected no such matter; being thrown into prison, and after brought to a publick hearing before our whole nations; who shewed how much a man could say for himself in so bad a cause. In the end he was sent unto the Venetians Baylies, and that in the night, (lest he should have cryed out that he would have turned Mussel-man, and have been taken from them) who made sure to have him, and sent him (as they say) to row in the Gallies at Candy. The principal commodities that our Merchants fetch from hence, are Turkie Carpets, Chamolets, and Grogerams. They take in here also some quantity of raw Silk, and Carpets of Persia, brought over-land from thence by the Armenian Merchants. But the Sultanies, and especially the Royals of eight, wherewith this City is well stored, and which in no place lose of their value, is that they most seek for by the sale of their Ware they bring hither. For although they lose by their broad Cloths and Kerfies, yet amends is made by the plentiful returns of the Silks that are sent from Aleppo to Tripoly, and other other commodities of the Levant purchased with that money. The main of our commodities brought hither, is Cloth and Kerfies, but Tin is the most profitable: here exceedingly used, and exceedingly wasted; for they tin the in-fides of their Vessels, and monthly renew it. The Mosses teeth, all kind of Furs, and wrought Iron, do here sell to much profit, with other Wares, which I forbear to mention, since it is no part of my skill or profession.

FINIS LIBRI PRIMI

THE

THE SECOND BOOK.

January being now well spent, we departed from Constantinople in the Trinity of London, a Ship of better defence than Sail. By the way we made some stay before Callipoly, sending a shore for the Consul, (an old Frier, and a boon companion) who sick of his last nights surfeits, sent his Drogherman with a Janizary along with us, to clear our Ship below at the Castles. For these two Forts command this passage of the Hellepont; permitting no Christian Ships to pass out, untill there they have remained for three days, (whereas the Turkish Ships are discharged in one) that if so be any thing hath been done above unjustifiable, intelligence may be given: and there are also searched for concealed Slaves, and goods contrabanded; which found, import no less than loss both of Ship and liberty.

A. Allylos. B. Sestos.
D. Cape Janizary appearing afar off like two Islands.

C. Tenedos

Like these are those on the Straights of Bosphorus, by which the Turk, as it were chaineth up the Propontick Sea, so that none pass in or out, without his allowance, and discharge of duties. A little short of these we came to an anchor.

Right against where we lay, and on Europe side, stands Madyo, called formerly Maidos, and Maditos, a large Town, almost altogether inhabited by Grecians. On the top of a round hill there are the remains of an edifice, whose ruine would per-swade that it flourished in the old worlds child-hood. The Inhabitants call it the Virgin Tower, and that is all they can say thereof. A Wedding here in the forenoon, entertained our time in the after-noon. They dance in rings about the Musi- cian; a man, and then a woman, taking hands a-crofs, and using variety of not un-comely action; the Country wenches clothed in Damask and Sattin, their hair and bosoms set forth with Pearl and Stones; rich, if not counterfeit. Of these the day following we met with divers carrying Pitchers on their heads, and stuck with Rags, below the condition of poverty. The marriage day they consume in dancing, and the night in feasting; the Bride not breaking company until the break of day, and (as they say) not known by her husband until the third night following. The night watched, made us make a night of the morning, until row'd from our ground-beds by the report of the Canon. When from the shore, between the Caffes, you might behold a Gally pulling, and that so leisurely, as if empty, and purposely suffered to drive with the current, rather to exercise the Artillery, than manned by men, endeavouring safety, and to beset with destruction. At length the Sea entered at her many breaches; and by little and little devoured the spectacle. The men, some slain, some drown'd, others by Boats from each side cruelly saved, out-lived to envy their dead companions. These were Christian-slaves, that hewed stones in the Quarries at Marmora, who, to compass their liberty, had slain their Guardians, and flown away with the Gally. Hither they came too late, nor durst they linger unto the evenings; to proceed or return was now grown equally desperate. Approaching near, a warning-piece was given them to come to an anchor; when they, leaving their Oars, lay down, all saving he that steered, and committed themselves to the wind, that then blew fresh and favourably, but like an hollow friend, shrunk from their falls in their greatest necessity. More happy succeeds not long before had a Gally for the most part manned by English, who passed by, and that by day, in despite of them. Cheaper wines than here are hardly elsewhere to be had, or in greater plenty; inasmuch as most Christian ships returning from Constantinople, do at this place take in their provision. Dispatched at length, not without some gifts and much sustenance, we hoisted sails, and the night ensuing we tossed to and fro, on the West of Mitylene. The next day we laboured to get in between Chios and the Continent, but failed; when failing on the other side of the Island, the wind came about, whereof we took the benefit for Alexandria.

swade

Hard by, and on the left hand, lest we Samos, now Samo, in which it was said that Juno was born under a white Willow, close by the River Imbrasius: and for that the was there brought up, whilst yet a Virgin, it was called Paribenia. Allegorically the is taken for the element of the Air; and fained for that cause to have been born in Sa- mos; for that the Air is here so pure, and so excellent. Samos doth also challenge one of the Sibyls, whose name was Pytho, and Heripbile, and flourished in the days of Numa Pompilius, of Christ thus prophecying.

Thy God, thou souless Juda knew'st not; known
Not unto earthly minds: but crowned hast
His brows with Thorns, and given him Gall to taste.

Tu enim stulte Judæa Deum tuum non cognovisti
Ludentem mortalium mentibus.
Sed spinis coronasti, horridumque fel miscuisti.

But in nothing more famous than in the birth of Pythagoras.

From Heaven though far remov'd, he with his mind
Drew near the Gods: what natures power denies
To humane sight, he saw with his soules eyes.

— si licet cœli regione remotus
Mente Deos adiit: & quæ natura negabat
Visibus humanis, oculis ea pectoris hausit;
Ovid. Met. l. 15.

The first that brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. This Island is not above a quarter of a mile distant from the Continent of Asia, fruitful in all things but Vines, which is the rather to be noted, in that the Countries round about produce such store, and so excellent. At the South end stood the City of Samia, with a goodly harbour adjoining; now (as the rest) by reason of the Pirats that infest their Seas, almost altogether desolate. Of the earth thereof were those Vessels made of such great esteem; sovereign also for divers uses both in Physick and Chirurgery.
The North-west of the Isle is high land, environed with unaccessible cliffs, full of tall wood within, and most commodious for building of Ships.

On the right hand, and near, lyeth Niceria, heretofore Icaris, taking that name, as doth the adjacent Sea, as the Poets fain, from the fall of Icarus.

When

Oraque carolæ patrium clamantia nomen
Excipiuntur aqua, quæ nomen traxit ab illo.
Ovid. Met. l. 8.

And in this Island he

Devoique suas artes, corpusque sepulchro
Condidit, & tellus a nomine dicta sepulci est
Ibid.

When crying, Help, O Father! his exclaim
The blue Seas stopt, which took from him their name.

Cursing his arts, interr'd the corps, that gave
The land a name, which had given it a grave.

called Pergamum before. Who were said to flee in regard of their fails, by Dædalus then first invented to out-strip the pursuit of Minos; when Icarus in another vessel, by bearing too great a fail, suffered ship-wreck hereabout. It is now rarely inhabited, yet abounding with good pasture: Corn it also produceth plentifully. It hath no Haven, but divers Roads, sufficiently commodious. Between these two Islands lye those sharp Rocks, in times past called Melanitis, and now the Fornosi; well known, and in the night much feared by Mariners.

South of these we failed by Palmos formerly Patmos; a little Island consisting only of three or four rocky Mountains. On one of them stands a Town, and on the very top thereof a Monastery of Greek Colobites, having large exhibitions from sundry places of Christendom. Men ignorant in letters, studious for their bellies, and ignominiously lazy, unless some few that give themselves to Navigation, and become indifferent good Pilots. About this Isle there are variety of excellent Harbours, and not so few as forty fail of Ships belonging to the Town, by the trading whereof they bring in that sustenance which the soil affordeth not, being so barren that nothing grows, as I have heard, especially near unto the Town, except on such earth as is brought thither from other places. And therefore inflicted as a punishment unto St. John, hither banished by the Emperor Trajan, or as some write, by Domitian; for so the Romans accustomed to confine offenders.

Auda aliquid brevis Gyaris aut carcere dignum,
Si vis esse aliquid; probas laudatur & alget.
Juv. Sat. 1.

If thou intend'st to thrive, do what deserves
Short Gyarus, or Gyves; prais'd & Verses serves.

On the North-side of this hill, we saw the house wherein (they say) he writ his Revelation; and a little above, the Cave in which it was revealed: both held in great devotion by those Christians. After the death of the Emperor, he removed unto Ephesus, and being a hundred and twenty years old, causing a Grave to be made, is said to have entred it alive, in the presence of divers, to whom seeming dead, they covered him with earth, which, if we may believe St. Augustine, * bubble like water, to testify his breathing, and that he is not dead, but sleppeth. In that Monastery is reserved a dead mans hand, which they affirm to be his, and that the nails thereof being cut, do grow again.

Aug. in Fob. Tract.
124.

Amongst divers other Islands we passed by Coos, now called Longo, a delicate Country to behold, lying for the most part level, only towards the East not un-profitably mountainous; from whence fall many Springs, which water the Plains below, and make them extraordinary fruitful, where grow those Wines so celebrated: Cypress-trees, and Turpentine, with divers others, as well delightful as profitable. In this was Hippocrates born, who revived Physick then almost lost, and the ancient practice of Æsculapius, unto whom this Island was consecrated. In the Suburbs he had his Temple, famous, and rich with offerings. Those that had been sick, upon recovery there registred their cures, and the experiments whereby they were effected: of these Hippocrates made an abridgement, and committed them to posterity. In this Temple stood that rare picture of Venus, naked, as if newly rising from the Sea, made by Apelles, who was also this Country-man; after removed unto Rome by Octavius Cæsar, and dedicated unto Julius, he being reputed the mother of their family. It is said, that at the drawing thereof, he assembled together the most beautiful women in the Island, comprehending in that his own work their divided perfections. For this picture the Coans had a hundred Talents remitted of their tribute. The Town and Citadel are now only inhabited by Turks; the Villages by Grecians; whereof in all are but two.

Next unto this stands Rhodes, of all the rest the most famous and beautiful; once covered with the Sea, or at least an uninhabitable Marsh, as they feign, beloved of the Sun, and erected above the Waves by his powerful influence. For no day passeth passeth wherein the Sun here shines not clearly: perhaps the occasion of that Fable,

Others will praise bright Rhodes.

Laudabunt alii claram Rhodon. Hor. l. od. 7.

obtaining thereby that title as a peculiar Epithite. Some write that it took this name of Rhoda a Nymph of the Sea; and there compressed by Apollo: others that there he lay with Venus, and of her begat Rhoda.

Rhodes was begot by Solon Cyprides
Of whose three sons descended are * three Cities.
Then when the God approacht the Goddess, flowert
Of Gold pour'd down with Roses, and white Flowers.

Infula dicta Rhodos de Sole & Cypride nata est
De tribus & natis horum tres sunt simul urbes.
Cumque Deam Deus accessit gurta pluit aur.
Purpureaque rosa ludæ, ac lilla rosæ.
* Lindus, Camirus, Jalfius.

For Rhodes in the Greek tongue signifieth a Rose; and by likelihood so called of the abundance of Roses, which this soil produceth. This Island therefore was to the Sun held sacred, to whom they erected that huge Colossus of Brass, worthily reputed amongst the Worlds seven wonders; made by Chares of Lindus, the Servant of Lysippus; and whereof, as some affirm, they were called Colossians. In height it was three-score and ten cubits, every finger as great as an ordinary Statue, and the thumb too great to be fathomed. Twelve years it was a making, and about three-score and six years after thrown down by an Earth-quake, which terribly shook the whole Island, prophesied of by Sibyl. The pieces thereof made wonderful ruptures in the earth; and another wonder it was to see the mass of stones contained therein, whereby the work men had confirmed it against the violence of weather. With the Brass thereof nine hundred Camels were laden. No place in times past was held superior unto this for conveniency of harbour, magnificent buildings, and other excellencies. Famous it was for government, and men so expert in Navigation, that they became Lords, and for many years held the sovereignty of the Seas. The air is here most temperate, producing fruits abundantly; rich pastures sprinkled with Flowers, and Trees still flourishing. The felicity of the place affording an argument to that Fable of the golden thowas that fell thereon. Their Wines thus Virgil celebrateth,

Receiv'd by gods, and last crown'd cups, will I
Thee Rhodia, nor thy long big Grapes, go buy

Non ego te Ditis & mensis accepta secundis, Transierim Rhodia, & tumidis bumalia racemis;
Georg. l. 2.

where also it is said, that the Vine was first found out and planted. After that the Knights of Saint John de Acre had lost the City of Acre, the last that they held in the Holy Land; they had this place consigned them by Emanuel the Greek Emperour, in the year 1308. which they took from the Turks, and maintained to his terror. Having then one City only, but that well fortified, seated towards the morning Sun, on the ascending hill, a part on the level shore, embracing, as it were, a moist safe and admirable Haven; treble walled, adorned with Towers, and fortified with five strong Fortresses, often invaded, and to little purpose: at length it was taken by Solyman the Magnificent (Villerius being the Great Master) with six months siege, a world of people, and the loss of most of them, in the year 1522. after it had been by them defended against the Infidels two hundred and fourteen years; and then honourably surrendered, although to the general dishonour of the Christian Princes in their tardy succours.

Bright Rhodes, bright in times past, now black with clouds:
Thy shining sure bead a dire tempest shrouds.
O grief! O death! O what than grief is worse,
And death! than that! if there be such a curse,
Sleep? and the fell wolf seizeth the spoil?
O shame to have ta'n a voluntary foil!

Clara Rhodos, sed clara olim, nunc horrida nimbia:
Obnubuit nitidum dira procella caput.
Ah dolor, ah mors, ah aliquid morte atq; dolurius aut etiam terribis esse potest? (lore!)
Scertius? & ferus armenti lupo optima caput?
O jam sic jam aliquis velle perire pudor.

Unto this lamentable subversion (though meant perhaps by a former) may that prophecy of Sibyl be unwittedly applied.

Daughter of Phæbus. Rhodes, long shalt thou reign:
Abound in wealth, and rule of Seas obtain.

Tuque diu nulli Rhodæ subdita, filia Solis:
Durabis, multaque olim pollebis opum vi:
Imperioque maris primas eris—

Præda tamen studio tandem rapieris amantum
Cervicemque jugo, dives formosaque subdes.
Orac. Sib. 3.

Yet forc'd by those that covet thee, at last
Thou shalt thou be, rich, fair, for glory past.

Such as would, according to composition were suffered to depart, who from hence removed unto Malta; so that now it is inhabited by Turks & Jews; those Christians that be, being Greeks, and not suffered after Sun-set to abide in the City, the Suburbs whereof are utterly razed. I have heard that all the Monuments, Statues, and Inscriptions belonging to the Knights of the Order, are by the Turks preserved entire, excepting such as the Wars had demolished. Here the Grand Signior maintaineth five Gallies, about this Island we expected to have met with Pirats, but were happily deceived.

Now having lost the sight of Rhodes, we saw no land until the third day after; in the evening doubtfully discovering the Coast of Egypt; fearing the Lee-shore, all night we bore out to Sea, the Lightning ministring uncomfortable light, intermixed with Thunder and Tempest. The next day we entred the Haven of Alexandria newly defamed with a number of wracks, which scattered here and there, did miserably testify the unsafe protection of that Harbour. For not past two nights before, the Northern winds beating full upon the mouth of the Haven, with violent Seas drove the foremost Ships from their Anchors, who falling foul on the rest, sunk all for company, even two and twenty in number; amongst the rest, that great and warlike Ship called the Red Lion, taken but the year before from the Knights of Malta.

But before we proceed any farther in particulars, meet it is that something be said of Egypt in general. Egyptus the son of Belus, for his greater glory so named this kingdom, called Misraim by the Hebrews, of Misraim the son of Chus, Mesre by the Arabians, and Chibith by the Inhabitants, of Chibith the first Lord of this Land, and who first began to build houses. On the East it is confined with the Arabian Desarts; those of Bara, Libia, and Numidia lying on the West; on the South divided from Aethiopia by the great Cataract, and bounded Northward by the Egyptian Sea, being a part of the Mediterranean. A Coast dangerous and unhospitable, full of flats, and having no Haven save that of Alexandria, which is by a Desert divided from the rest of the habitable Country, so that it is neither by Sea nor Land to be invaded, but with much difficulty. It is said to extend from North to South, five hundred and threescore miles, for a long tract contracted between barren Mountains, in many places scarce four, in few above eight miles broad, until not far above Cairo, it beginneth by degrees to enlarge, and so continueth to do, even to the Sea: being between Rosetta and Damiata, which stand upon the West and East confines of that which is overflowed by the natural course of the River an hundred and forty miles; and from Rosetta to Alexandria thirty, all low ground, and lying in a Champion level.

Terra suis contenta bonis, non indiga mercis,
Aut Jovis; in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo.
Lucan. l. 8.

That needs nor merchandize, nor Jove's a soil
Pleas'd with it self, so confident in Nile.

By means whereof, saith Isocrates, they have both drought and moisture in their own disposition, which is elsewhere bestowed by Jupiter. The wonderful fertility of the soil is rather to be admired than expressed: in times past reputed the Granary of the World, insomuch that it was not thought possible for the Roman Empire to subsist, if not assisted by the affluence of Egypt. The occasion of that saying of Selimus, when he had conquered the Country, that, Now he had taken a Farm that would feed his Jemogians. Amongst other commodities which this earth doth yield, and are fetcht from

* Sesostris, hence by Foreigners, Sugar, Flax, Rice, all manner of Grain, Linen-Cloth, Hides, Salt, Cambyses. Butargo, and Cassia, being now the principal. Alexander, Whatsoever here is estimable, proceedeth from the munificency of this River; for Philadelphus, progress and property of all other the most excellent: unto former ages, though often Nero, attempted, (and that of great * Potentates) of an un-discovered original. Cyc.

Cum videant primi, quærun't tamen hi quoq; Seres,
Æthiopumque feris alieno gurgite campos:
Et te terrarum nescit cui debeat orbis.
Arcanum natura caput non prodidit ulli:
Nec licuit populis parvum te, Nile, videre,
Amovitque sinus, & gentes maluit ortus
Mirari quam nosse tuos—

Lucan. l. 10.

When first thy Seres see, yet seek, who bears
Through Ethiopian fields streams none of theirs.
Nor knows the wondring world, in what world bred:
So Nature, Nile, conceals thy sacred head;
None seeing thee not great. The Fountains she Hath set apart, and would that they should be Rather admir'd than known.

Yet

Yet Nero with his best success sent two Centurions, who assisted by the King of Ethiopia, and by him commended to the neighbouring Princes, after a long and troublesome journey, came at length unto certain great Marshes, of whose extents the Inhabitants themselves were ignorant, nor possible to be discovered by them; so were the Weeds infolded with the water, not to be waded, nor by Boat to be past thorow. There saw they two Rocks, from whence a Current gusheth with excessive violence. But whether this was the Fountain, or only an augmentation; whether then beginning, or before received into the earth, and there re-ascending, was uncertain. But our more presuming Geographers do raise his concealed head from the Lake of Zembre, (in which, they say, are Syrens and Tritons) eleven degrees beyond the Æquator, seated amongst high and unaccessible Mountains, and so great, as deserving rather the title of a Sea. From whence it passeth, wandering thorow spacious Desarts, and multitudes of Kingdoms, not seldom seeming to affect his forsaken Fountains, now dispersed into ample Lakes, and again recollecting his extravagant Waters, which often divide to make fortunate Islands, (amongst which Meroe the fairest and most famous) appearing ever more great than violent.

*But when rough crags and head-long Cataracts
Receive his falls, mad that each rock distracts
His former un-impeached source, he laves
The stars with spume, all tremble with his waves:
The mountain roars, and fuming with high spite,
Immaneth his unvanquish'd waves in white.*

—Sed cum lapsus abrupta viarum
Excepere tuos, & præcipites cataractas;
Ac nusquam vetitis illas obistere cautes
Indignaris aquis; spuma nunc astra lacessis;
Cuncta tremunt undis; & multo murmure montis
Spumeus invictis albescit fluctibus annis.
Lucan. l. 10.

For unlike himself, like a raving Torrent, struggling amongst the broken Rocks, and less free passages, at length he spouts down from a wonderful height into the Valley below; and that with such a roaring of waters, that a Colony there planted by the Persians, made almost deaf with the noise, were glad to abandon their habitations: otherwise for all uses of life sufficiently commodious. Amongst the rest, the incredible boldness of these people was not the least to be wondred at, daring to commit themselves in little Boats, but capable of two only (the one steering, and the other rowing) unto the raging Current and impetuous Eddies, passing the Straights of the Rocks by little Channels, and at length rush down with the stream to the amazement of the beholders, who giving them lost, behold them after a while, as if shot out of an Engine, far from the place of their fall, and rowing safely in the asswaged waters. Not far below, and a little above, where once stood the City Elephantis, Schrophis and Mophis, two piked Rocks, lift up their eminent heads, which do make the lesser Cataract, and are called, The Vines of Nilus: where, as Herodotus reports from an Egyptian Priest, are Fountains of an unfearchable profundity, into which rich gifts were thrown in their annual Solemnities. Increased, as is supposed, by this accession in deeper streams and stricter limits, kept in on both sides with not far distant Mountains, after a long procession:

*Seneca l. 4.
Nat. quest.*

*First, Memphis gives thee scope, and free release
From bounders that might limit thy increase.*

*Prima tibi campos permittit, apertaque Memphis
Rura, modumque vetat crescendi ponere ripas.
Lucan. l. 10.*

Four miles below Cairo it divideth into two main and navigable branches: that next the East running into the Mid-land Sea by Damiata (heretofore Pelusium): the other inclining unto the West, and formerly called Canopus, falleth into the self same Sea, a little below Rosetta, making of the richest portion of the Land a triangular Island named Delta, in that it beareth the form of that Letter: the fresh water keeping together, and changing the colour of the salt, far further into the Sea, than the shore from thence can be discerned. Two other branches there be that run between these, but poor in waters; besides divers Channels cut by the labour of man, for conveyances in the time of inundation; which also are no small strengthening to the Country. Of these seven mentioned by Herodotus, and those nine by Ptolomy, these are all that I either saw or could hear of. Nor is it a thing extraordinary for Rivers to lose their Channels, either choked by themselves, or by the adverse Seas, with beds of Sand, and turned-up Gravel retarding their passages. But amongst the hidden Mysteries of Nature, there is none more
H wonderful

wonderful, than is the overflowing of this River, making of a meer Defart (for such is Egypt unwatered by Nilus) the most fruitful part of the habitable World; little when others are great, and in their decrease, increasing.

The Image of Nilus brought by Vespasian out of Egypt and now is by some as Rome in the Piazza

Not ty'd to Laws of other Streams; the Sun
When farthest off, thy streams then poorest run.
Intemperate heaven to temper, midst of heat,
Under the burning Zone, bid to grow great.
Then Nile assists the world; lest fire should quell
The earth, and make his high-born waters swell
Against the Lions flaming jaws:—

Inde etiam leges aliarum nescit aquarum,
Necumat Hybernus, quam longe sole remoto
Officiis caret unda suis, dare iulus iniquo
Temperiem caelo, mediis aëstibus exit
Sub torrente plaga, ne terras dissipet ignis,
Nilus adest mundo, contraque accensa Leonis
Ora tumet—

Lucan. l. 10.

The earth then burnt with the violent fervour, never refreshed with Rain, (which here falls rarely, and then only in the Winter) hath help from Nilus, most constantly observing his accustomed seasons, beginning to arise with the rising Sun on the seventeenth of June: swelling by degrees, until it mount sometimes four and twenty cubits, but that the uttermost. Heretofore sixteen was the most that it attained to; presented by that Image of Nilus, having sixteen Children playing about it; brought from thence, and dedicated by Vespasian in his Temple of Peace: now in this form to be seen in Rome in the Vatican.

This year at Cairo it rose three and twenty. About two miles above the City, at the end of old Cairo, in the beginning of August they cut the banks, then when ascending to his principal height: before kept in, lest that the too timely Deluge should destroy the fruits of the earth, ere fit to be reaped. At which the Bassa is himself in person (who giveth the first stroke) accompanied with a world of people, rowed in Gallies and Barges of Triumph, and for divers days feasting: the Bassa in the Castle of Michin, an Island surrounded with Nile (so called, in that there the Pillar doth stand, by which they observe the increase of the River) others under Pavillions pitched by the shore, with barbarous Solemnities and general Rejoycings. Of their night-triumphs this following Picture representeth the form

- A. The Castle in the Island where the Bassa at the cutting of the Banks of the Calix (for so is that Trench called that waters the East of Egypt) keeps his three days and three nights feast with his Women, (yet separated from men) accompanied with the principal Persons of the Land.
- B. The Pillar, standing in a Pash within the Castle, cured by the Nile, by which they measure his increase, whereof Boys with yellow Banners in their hands, inform the Citizens daily, and for their news receive gifts of divers.
- C. Two great Towers, whereon buildings are raised an huge height, with Masts and Riggers for those three nights stuck all with burning lamps, which afford a glorious spectacle. They report here, that in the time of Paganism, the Egyptians accustomed to sacrifice a maid and a young man to Isis and Osiris, at the yearly solemnity. But that inhuman custom abolished, that these lights were offered to those Idols in their room: being observed since both by Christians and Mohammedans, though not as a Sacrifice,

D. The Plain lying between old Cairo and Nile, where (the admirable Fire-worshippers ending with the night) they play at Gioco di cani: shewing other Exercises on Horse-back, and emulating the time with sundry devices. Mean while the Fire-worshippers are for the next night triumphs a renewing. Every Saujak and Turk of great account hath a gallant Beas, furnished with Chambers and Isfer for adorned with all variety of Streamers and Pendants, each Boat assuming a several colour. So making Sea fights by day, in the night they set them forth with lamps of all colours, which giveth a brave addition to the other; the lights being so ingeniously placed, that they present the forms of Gallies, Ships, Turbies, Hofes, Castles, and the like.

At their return they are met by those of the City, who bestrew their heads with Flowers, as the welcome fore-runners of that they long wished. The turned in water followeth them at the heels; Boats now rowed, where but now they trampled; filling the dusty Trenches and long emptied Cisterns: and a while after covering in many places the superficies of the Land, which there then appeareth as a troubled lake. Answerable to the increase of the River, is the plenty or scarcity of the year succeeding; bringing with it both earth and water into a sandy and thirsty soil, of it self unprofitable: so that it as well manures as moistens with the fat and pregnant slime which it leaveth behind it. Unto which they own not their riches only, but themselves. For the Plague, which here oft miserably rageth, upon the first of the flood doth instantly cease: infomuch as when five hundred dye at Cairo the day before, which is nothing rare, (for the found keep company with the sick, holding death fatal, and to avoid them irreligion) not one doth dye the day following. Wherefore no marvel though ignorant and superstitious Antiquity under the name of Osiris adored this River, which afforded them so many benefits, and such as not apprehended, were thought supernatural. Thus where covered with water, it is no unpleasant sight to behold the Towns appearing like little lands; The people passing and re-passing by Boat, and not seldom swimming: who, the less they see of their Country, the more is their comfort. About the midst of September it ceaseth to augment; and retiring a month after within his proper bounds, giveth way unto Husbandry, (the earth untill'd, by throwing the grain on the Mud and Rice into the water, affording her first increase) until May decreasing, and then in a marvellous penury of water. Of the cause of this Inundation divers have conjectured diversly. The Egyptians by three Pitchers deciphered the same in their Hieroglyphicks, proceeding (as they thought) from a threefold cause. First, from the earth, by nature apt to breed of it self, and bring forth water abundantly. Next, from the South Ocean, from whence they imagined that it had his Original: and lastly, from the rain which fell in the upper Ethiopia about the time of the overflow. The most ancient opinion was, that it proceeded from the Snow dissolving in those Mountains: of which Anaxagoras and Aeschylus: thus also expressed by Euripides.

Aquam pulchram descensens
Fluminis Nil, quæ ex terra deficit
Nigrorum hominum, & tunc tumescit undas
Quoniam Ethiopica nives liquuntur.

The goodly streams of Nilus leaving,
Which from the land of Negroes flow:
Their inundations receiving
From thaws of Ethiopian snow.

But the excessive heat of those Climates, the stones there burning hot, and earth not by day to be trod upon, confute sufficiently that error. But to answer him by one of his own profession;

Vana fides veterum, Nilo quod crevit in arva
Ethiopum prodesse nives, Non arctos in illis
Montibus, aut Boreas, restis ubi sole perusti
Ipse color populi, calidique vaporibus Austri.
Adde quod omne caput fluvii quodcumque soluta
Præcipit glacies, ingressu vere tumescit
Prima tabe nives—

Lucan. l. 10.

Vain th' old belief, that Ethiopian snow
Awaileth Nile's increase; No weak winds blow,
Nor frosts benum those mountains. This aver
The sultry South-winds and black Climates:
Add, that all streams which from dissolv'd snow draw
Their heady torrents, swell with the first thaw
In flow'ry Spring-tide—

Nor knoweth it ever in Egypt, a Country more temperate by many degrees:

Memphim carentem Scythonia nive.
Hor. lib. 3. Od. 26.

Scarce'th Memphs knows
No Scythian snows.

being here in the depth of Winter as hot as with us in July. Thales attributes it unto the Northern Winds, which then blowing up the River, retails the Current, and and force the reverberated Streams to retire: so that not increased, but prohibited, at length it descendeth with such a multitude of waters. Which opinion is rather alleged, than confirmed, by Lucretius.

Or that the North winds do his months oppose,
Then yearly when the Etesia firmly blows,
Whose long encountering blasts resist his way,
Beat back his streams, enforcing him to stay.

Aut quis sunt æstate Aquilones ostia contra
Anni tempore eo, quo Etesia flava feruntur,
Et contra fluvium flantes memorantur, & undas
Cogenes furis, replent, coguntque manere,
Lucr. l. 6.

For if so, all other Rivers whatsoever, running the same way, would have the same property. Besides, how could it then increase and decrease so leisurely? or how become it so troubled and stony?

Or rolling sands, which adverse floods provoke
To raise in shelves, his yawning mouths up-crook,
When seas throng in among, curag'd by winds,
So that the stream a less free passage finds,
His force curb'd with their waves.

Et quoque uti possit magnus congestus arenæ
Fluctibus adversis oppilare ostia contra,
Cum mare permotum ventis ruit inter arenam,
Quo fit uti pacto liber minus exitus amni,
Et proclivis idem fluit minus impetus undis.
Ibid.

But the Etesie blows mildly, and the increase well known to begin far above the Casasalis. Herodotus in dislike of these, preferreth his own. How that the Sun performing his course in the Winter Tropick, and exhaling much moisture from Nilus, diminisheth him contrary to his nature; when again inclining to the North, the River recovers his greatness: seeming in the Summer to increase, when it so but seems to do by his decreasing in the Winter. But this is also reproved by Diodorus Siculus, who imputes the cause thereof unto abundance of rain falling on the Ethiopian Mountains for forty days together, at such time as the Sun approacheth to the sign of Cancer: which by the Inhabitants is likewise affirmed to be true; as being received from strangers frequenting Cairo from sundry parts of Ethiopia and Lybia, who come down with the flood, and bring with them Slaves, Monkeys, Parrots, and such like Commodities. And not unlikely; those Mountains being of an incredible height, where the air removed so far from the reflecting heat, must be much more cool, the Sun then being in the contrary Tropick. Moreover, some months before, for divers days you shall here see the troubled air full of black and ponderous Clouds, and hear a continual rumbling, threatening, as it were, to drown the whole Country, yet seldom so much as dropping, but are carried South-ward by the Northern winds which constantly blow at that season. Some have written, that by certain Kings inhabiting above, the Nilus should there be stopped; and at a time prent, let loose upon a certain Tribute paid them by the Egyptians. The error springing perhaps from a truth (as all wandering reports for the most part do) in that the Sultan doth pay a certain annual sum to the Abissin Emperour for not diverting the course of the River, which they say he may, or impoverish it at the least. Otherwise what Dam can contain such a confluence of waters? how continueth it so long? or where doth it gather that slime that so enricheth the Country? To prove that it proceedeth from a natural cause; this one, though strange, yet true experiment will suffice. Take of the earth of Egypt, adjoining to the River, and preserve it carefully, that it neither come to be wet nor walked: weigh it daily, and you shall find it neither more nor less heavy until the seventh of June; at which day it beginneth to grow more ponderous, and augmenteth with the augmentation of the River: whereby they have an infallible knowledge of the state of the Deluge, proceeding without doubt from the humidity of the Air, which having a recourse through all passible places, and mixing therewith, increaseth the same as it increaseth in moisture. In the tenth and eleventh year of Cleopatra, it is by Writers of those times for a certainty affirmed, that the Nilus increased not; which two years defect, prognosticated the fall of two great Potentates, Cleopatra and Antony. Many Ages before Callimachus reports, that it did the like for nine years together. For the same cause, no question, but that seven years dearth proceeded in the time of Pharaoh.

Slow Nile with low-sunk streams shall keep his brays,
Nor hung-down head, nor fruitful slime up-raise;
Dry fields, dry Solstice, all dried up, nor shall Fat floods from high sky-kissing mountains fall.

Ipse inter ripas demisso flumine Nilus
Current iners, supràque caput limumque trahentem
Non tollit: sicca arebant arva, omnia sicca
Solstitia, nulli descendente montibus amnes.

H 3

From

From this River there ascend no vapours, the humour being rarified by so long a progress; so that although exhaled, it assumed no visible body, but undistinguishably mixed with the pure Air, agreeing with the same in tenuity. Than the waters whereof there is none more sweet, being not unpleasantly cold, and of all others the most wholesome. Confirmed by that answer of Pscentius Niger unto his murmuring Souldiers, What? crave you wine, and have Nilus to drink of? Such is it in being so concocted by the Sun, at all times in some part directly over it, and by length of course, running from South to North (besides in ambages) above one and forty degrees. So much it nourisheth, as that the Inhabitants think that it forthwith converteth into blood, retaining that property ever since thenceinto metamorphosed by Moses. For which cause the Priests of Isis would not permit their Asis to drink of the same; because they would neither have him nor themselves too fat and corpulent, that the soul might the better exercise her faculties, being clothed in a light and delicate body. Besides, it procureth liberal urine, cureth the dolour of the reins, and is most sovereign against that windy melancholy arising from the shorter ribs, which so saddeth the mind of the diseased. Out of the River, they put the water into large Jars of stone, stirring it about with a few stamp Almonds, wherewith also they beset the mouth of the vessel, and for three or four hours do suffer it to clarify.

It also produceth abundance of fish, in shape and quality much differing from ours; but by reason of the muddy Chanel, not altogether favourite nor wholesome. Moreover, divers strange and monstrous Creatures, as Bulls, of the River, (so they write) not much unlike to those of the Land, but no bigger than a Calf of half a year old, and which will live for a long time out of the water. River-horses, called Hippotami, having great heads, wide jaws, being armed with tusks as white as the Ivory, of body as big as a Cow, and proportioned like a Swine: yet (otherwise and contrary to each other, described by Herodotus, Diodorus, and Pliny, though the first had seen of them here, and the last at Rome in a Triumph.) lustful they be, ravenous, and revengeful. It is reported in the Spanish Navigations, how that two of them being found ashore by a few Portugals, and having gotten from them into the water, assailed the Boat with great fury, into which they saw them ascend, undaunted with their shot, biting the sides of the Vessel, and departing rather out of despair of hurting, than otherwise terrified. In another Voyage, others endeavourd to overturn a Boat, that they might have devoured the men that were in her.

But these (if of these there be now any) are rare to the Crocodile, in shape not unlike a Lizard, and some of them of an incredible greatness. So great from so small a beginning is more than wonderful, some of them being above thirty foot long, hatcheth of Eggs no bigger than those that are laid by a Turkie. His tail is equal to his body in length, wherewith he insoldeth his prey, and draws it into the River. His feet are armed with claws, and his back and sides with scales scarce penetrable; his belly tender, soft, and is easily pierced; his teeth indented within one another; having no tongue, and moving of his upper jaw only; his mouth so wide, when extended, as some of them are able to swallow an entire Heifer. Four months of the year he eateth nothing, and those be during the Winter: on the Land thick-fighted, not so in the Water, to whom both Elements are equally useful. The Female lays an hundred Eggs, as many days they are in hatching; and as many years they live that do live the longest, continually growing. Where the layeth, there is (as they write) the uttermost limit of the succeeding overflow: Nature having endued them with that wonderful prescience, to avoid the inconveniencies, and yet to enjoy the benefit of the River. By the figure therefore of a Crocodile, Providence was by the Egyptians Hieroglyphically expressed. Between the Dolphins and these there is a deadly Antipathy. Babillus, a man highly commended by Seneca, obtaining the Government of Egypt, reported that he saw at the mouth of Nilus, then called Heraclitium, a shoal of Dolphins rushing up the River, and encountered by a sort of Crocodiles, fighting as it were for Sovereignty; vanquished at length by those mild and harmless Creatures, who swimming under, did cut their bellies with their spiny fins; and destroy- ing many, made the rest to flye, as overthrow in battel. A Creature fearful of the bold, and bold upon the fearful. Neither did the Temerities master them in regard of their blood or favour, (as some have conjectured) but being fierce and courageous. A people dwelling far above, in an Island environed by Nilus, only

*Alpinus de
Med. &c.
Egyp. l. 1.
cap. 12.*

The Dolphin and our Porpine are called Sus-marina, of his similitude to a Swine.

only hardy against those, and the only men that durst assail them before, out of an innate hatred greedily pursuing the encounter. But now few keep so low as Cairo by three days journey. They will devour whom they catch in the River; which makes the Country-people to fence in those places where they fetch their water: By day for the most part he liveth on the land, when between sleeping and waking, they write, that a little bird called Trochilus, doth feed her self by the picking of his teeth, wherewith delighted, and gaping wider, the Lebenmon his mortal enemy spying his advantage, whips into his mouth, and gliding down his throat, like an arrow, gnaweth a way through his belly, and destroys him. This, though now little spoken of, in times past was delivered for a truth, even by the Egyptians themselves, who gave Divine honour unto the Lebenmon for the benefit he did them in the destroying of that Serpent. And true, perhaps it is, though not observed by the barbarous. The bird is at this day known; described to be about the bigness of a Thrush, of colour white, the points of his feathers sharp, which he sets up on end like bristles, when he lists, and so pricketh the mouth of the Crocodile, if he but offer to close it. As for the Lebenmon, he hath but only changed his named, now called the Rat of Nilus. A beast particular to Egypt, about the bigness of a Cat, and as cleanly, snouted like a Ferret, but that black, and without long hair, sharp tooth'd, round ear'd, short leg'd, long tail'd (being thick where it joyns to the body, and spiny at the end) his hair sharp, hard, and branded, bristling it up when angry, and then will flye upon a Mastiff. They are thought (for they have an appearance of both) to be of both genders. Their young ones are brought to Markets by the Country-people, and greedily bought by the Towns-men for the destroying of Mice and Rats, which they will notably hunt after, strong, nimble, and subtil wital. They will rest themselves upon their hinder feet, and rising from the earth, jump upon their prey with a violent celerity. They prey also upon Frogs, Lizards, Chamelions, and all sorts of lesser Serpents: being a deadly enemy to the Asp, and do destroy the Eggs of the Crocodile whereforever they can find them. They will strangle all the Cats they meet with; for their mouths are so little, that they can bite nothing that is thick. They love nothing better than Poultry, and hate nothing more than the wind. But to return to the Crocodiles, the Country-people do often take them in Pit-falls, and grappling their chaps together with an Iron, bring them alive unto Cairo. They take them also with Hooks, baited with Sheep or Goats, and tyed with a rope to the trunk of a tree. The flesh of them they eat, all saving the head and tail, and sell their skins unto Merchants, who convey them into Christendom for the rarity. It is written in the Arabian Records, how Humelb Aben Thaulon (being Governour of Egypt for Gisfar Matanichi Caliph of Babylon) in the 270 year of their Hegir, caused the leaden Image of a Crocodile, found amongst the ruins of an ancient Temple, to be molten; since when the Inhabitants have complained, that those Serpents have been more noyful unto them than before; affirming that it was made, and there buried by the ancient Magicians to restrain their endamagings.

Throughout this Country there are no Wines, yet want they none, in that they desire them not. Neither are here any Trees to speak of, but such as are planted, and those in Orchards only, excepting Palms, which delight in Deserts; and being naturally theirs, do grow without limits. Of these they have plenty, pleasing the eye with their goodly forms, and with diversity of benefits enriching their owners. Of body straight, high, round, and slender, (yet unfit for buildings) crested about, and by means thereof with facility ascended. The branches like Sedges, slit on the neather side, and ever green; growing only on the uppermost height, resemble fair Plumes of Feathers, which they yearly prune, by lopping off the lowest, and at the top of all by baring a little of the bole. Of these there be male and female: both thrust forth Cods (which are full of seeds like knotted strings) at the root of their branches; but the female is only fruitful: and not so, unless growing by the male, (towards whose upright growth she inclines her crown) and have of his seeds commixed with hers, which in the beginning of March they no more fail to do, and to sow the earth at accustomed seasons. Their Dares do grow like fingers, and are thereof named: not ripe until the fine of December: which begin to cod about the beginning of February. They open the tops of such as are fruitless, or otherwise perisht; and take from thence the white pith, of old called the brain, which they fell up and down: an excellent Salad, not much unlike in taste, but far better than an Artichoke. Of the branches they make Bed-steads,
Lattices,

Lattices, &c. of the Web of the Leaves, Baskets, Mats, Fans, &c. of the outward Husk of the Cod, good Cordage, of the inward, Brushes, &c. such and such like afford they yearly without impair to themselves. This Tree they held to be the perfect image of a man, and by the same represented him. First, for that it doth not fructify, but by coiture: next, as having a brain, as it were, in the uppermost part, which once corrupted, as man, even so it perisheth: and lastly, in regard that on the top thereof grow certain strings which resemble the hair: the great end of the branches appearing like hands stretcht forth, and the Dates as fingers. And because the Palm is never to be suppressed, but shooteth up against all opposition, the boughs thereof have been propoosd as rewards for such as were either victorious in Arms or Exercises,

—Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum dominos evehit ad Deos.
Hor. l. 1. Od. 1.

—And noble Palms advance
Earths Potentates to Gods—

which they bare in their hands at their return from Victory. A custom first instituted by Thesus in the Island of Delos. Wood then is here but scarce, in regard of the quantity; and yet enough, if their uses for the same be considered. For they eat but little flesh, (fresh Cheese, fowre Milk made solid, Roots, Fruits, and Herbs, especially Colocasia, anciently called the Egyptian Bean, though bearing no Bean, but like the leaf of a Colewort, being their principal sustenance, baking their bread in Cakes on the Hearth, and mingling therewith the seeds of Coriander.) As for cold, they know it not, having sufficient of the refuse of Palms, Sugar-canes, and the like, to furnish them with fuel answerable to their necessities. But Foreigners that feed as in colder Countries, do buy their wood by weight, which is brought in hither by shipping. The Gallions also of Constantinople always go into the Black Sea for Timber, before they take their Voyage for Cairo. Omit I must not the fledge Reeds that grow in the Marishes of Egypt, called formerly Papyrus, of which they make Paper, and whereof ours made of Rags, assumeth that name. They divided it into thin flakes, whereinto it naturally parteth: then laying them on a Table, and moistning them with the glutinous water of the River, they press them together, and so dried them in the Sun. By this means Philadelphus erected his Library. But Eumenes King of Pergamus striving to exceed him in that kind, Philadelphus commanded that no Paper should be transported out of his Kingdom; whereupon Eumenes invented the making and writing upon Parchment, so called of Pergamus.

The Egyptians were said to have esteemed themselves the prime Nation of the World, in regard of their unknown beginning, the nature of the soil, and excellent faculties attained unto through a long continuance. But certain it is, that most of, or all Egypt was a Sea when other parts of the World were inhabited, made manifest by the shells and bones of fishes found in the intrails of the earth, and Wells which yield but salt and bitter waters: amongst so many, one only (and that reported to have sprung by a Miracle) to be drunk of. So that by the operation of the River, this Country hath this (being properly called, The gift of Nilus) bringing down earth with his Deluges, and extruding the Sea by little and little. Inasmuch as the life of Pharos thus described by Homer,

Insula deinde quondam est valde undoso in ponto
Ægyptum ante (Pharum vero ipsam vocant)
Tantum fumora quantum tota die cava navis
Conficit, cui fridulus ventus spirat à puppi.
Ody. l. 4.

An Isle there is by surging seas embrac't
Which men call Pharus, before Egypt plac't,
So far remove'd, as a swift ship may
Before the whistling winds sail in a day.

doth now adjoin to the Haven of Alexandria.

Busris, as the fairest feat of the earth, made choice of this Country to reign in: selecting the people unto several callings, and caused them to intend those only, whereby they became most excellent in their particular faculties. He possessed them first with the adoration of the Gods, emboldening and awing their minds with a being after death happy or unhappy, according to the good or bad committed in the present; and instituted the honouring of contemptible things; or for some benefit they did, or to appease them for such hurt as they had the power to inflict. Of these thus Juvensal, who then lived amongst them.

Wb. 4

What honour brain-sick Egypt to things vile
Affordeth, who not knows? a Crocodile
Thou part adores, that I his serpent feed.
Monks of gold they there divinely dred,
Where Memnon half form yields a magick sound;
And old Thebes flood, for hundred gates renown'd,
Here fishes of the Sea, there of the River:
Whole Towns a dog; none her that bears the Quiver.
Onions and Leek to eat, bight of impieties.
O sacred Nation sure, who have these Deities Grow in your gardens! all from sheep obtain:
'Tis sin to kill a Kid: yet humanes slain, Inhumanely they feed on—

Quis nescit Volucri Bithynice, qualia demens
Ægyptum portenta colat? Crocodilon adorat
Pars hæc: illa pavet larum serpentibus Ibin.
Æfigies sacri mictet aurea Cercopitheci,
Dimidio magice resonant ubi Memnon chorda.
Atque verus Thebes centum jacet obruta porcis.
Illic cæruleos, hic pisces fluminis: Illic
Oppida tota canem venerantur: nemo Dianam
Porcum & coepe nefas violare ac frangere mortui.
O sanctus genus quibus nascitur in hortis
Numina latant animalibus abstinet omnis
Mensa: nefas illic scærum jugulare capellæ,
Carnibus humanis vesci licet.

Joven. Sat. 15.

For the Tenters bearing an inveterate hatred to the Combs their Neighbours, for adoring the Crocodile, which they hated, fell upon them unawares in their civil janglings at the Celebration of their Festival; and putting them to flight, cut the hindmost in pieces, whom reeking hot, with heart yet panting, they greedily devoured: The Poet himself an eye-witness of the fact. Such Jars proceeded from their fertility of Gods, differing in each several Jurisdiction, and instituted by their politic crafty Kings, that busied with particular malice, they should not concur in a general Inturrection. Above all they honoured Isis and Osiris: which Fable (too tedious for our professed brevity) contained sundry Allegories. Amongst others, by Osiris they prefigured Nilus, by Isis the Earth made pregnant by the River, and by Typhon the Sea. They said, that Typhon was vanquished by Osiris, in that the River had so repulsed the Sea; and by Typhon afterward murdered, because at length the Sea doth as it were devour it. Their Priests were next in dignity to the King, and of his Council in all businesses of importance. From amongst them he was chosen; or if of the Souldiery, he forthwith was invested in the High-Priesthood, and instructed by them in the Mysteries of their Philosophy; delivered under Fables and Enigmatical expressions. They drank no Wine, until the time of Plumetium the last of the Pharachs, esteeming it to have sprung from the blood of the Giants, in that it provoked the mind to lust, impatience, cruelty, and all the disordered affections that those contempters of the gods were endued with. Of all the Heathen they were the first that taught the Immortality of the Soul, and the Transmigration thereof into another body, either of man or beast, clean or unclean, as it had behaved it self in the former. From whom Pythagoras received that opinion, and divulged it to the Grecians; who, the better to persuade, affirmed himself to have been once Æthalides the Son of Mercury, and commanded by his Father to ask what he would, immortality excepted, did desire after death to know what had passed in his life, and to have his memory entirely preserved, which by not drinking of Lethe he fell him accordingly. After the death of Æthalides, he became Euphorbus:

I (remember) at the Wars of Troy,
Euphorbus was, Pantheus son, and fill
By Menelaus lance. I knew right well
The shield which our left arm us'd to sustain,
At Argos lately seen in Juno's Fane.

Ipsæ ego (nam memini) Trojani tempore belli,
Pantheus Euphorbus eram, cui pectore quondam.
Hæsit in adverso gravis hasta minoris Atidae.
Cognovit clypeum lævæ gestamina notæ.
Nuper Abanteis templo Junonis in Argis.
Ovid. Met. 13.

and then Hermotimus, then Delius, then Pyrrhus a Fisherman, and last of all Pythagoras. By means whereof he withdrew the Grecians from luxury, and possessed their minds with the terror of ill-doing.

The Egyptians first invented Arithmetick, Musick, and Geometry; and by reason of the perpetual Crenity of the air, found out the course of the Sun and the Stars, their Constellations, Risings, Aspects, and Influences: dividing by the same the year into months, and grounding their divinations upon their hidden properties. Moreover, from the Egyptians, Orpheus, Museus, and Homer, have fetched their Hymns and Fables of the Gods: Pythagoras, Endoxus, and Democritus, their Philosophy, Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, the form of their Governments, by which they all in their several kinds have eternized their memories. Their Letters were invented by Mercury, who writ from the

the

the right hand to the left, as do all the Africans. But in holy things especially they expressed their conceits by Hieroglyphicks, which consist of significant figures: whereof there are yet many to be seen, though hardly to be interpreted. One I will produce for example, said to be pourtraited within the Porch of Minerva's Temple in the City of Sai:

In this ship-put am the Carter above va-ther to follow, than reform an arrow.

The Infant signifieth those that enter into the World, and the Old man those that go out of it; the Falcon, God; the Fish, hatred, because they hated fish that bred in the Sea, which symbolized Typhon; and by the River-horse, murder, impudence, and injustice: for they say that he killeth his Sire, and ravisheth his own Dam, which put together importeth, O you that enter the World, and go out of it; God hateth injustice.

The word signifies a King.

At the first they were governed by Pharaohs of their own; of whom Sesostris was the most famous and puissant, who entered the Red Sea in Gallies, which he first invented: subdued Arabia, and the greater part of Aethiopia and Lybia. Elated with these beginnings, he affected the Empire of the World: over-running not only those Countries of the greater Asia, long after overcome by Alexander; but to the uttermost Confines of the South and East Continent, extending his Conquests. Then inclining West-ward, he vanquished the Scythians, and those Nations that border on the Extreme Sea: passing over into Europe, he subdued the Thracians. When oppressed by famine, by reason of those more barren Countries, and the multitude of his people, he was constrained to give over his enterprise; and returning by the River Phasis overcame the Getae, where he left his most tried Souldiers, and supplied his Army with the people of that Country. Whereof Phaeac, describing the doors of the Temple of Colchis, figured with the Original of the Colchians.

Nec minus hic varia dux laurus imagine Templi,
Ad geminas fere ora fores; cunabula gentis
Colchidos hic, ortusque tuens: ut prima Sesostris
Insuliter Rex bella Getis; ut clade suorum
Terminus; hos Thebas, patriumque reducat ad amnem:
Phidis hos impomat agris; Colchoique vocari
Imperet: Arnoen ille, trepidaque requirunt
Cris laeta Phari; pingueque sine interibus amon,

Val. Flac. Argon. l. 5.

Delighted with the various imagery,
Upon the two-leav'd doors he throws his eye,
And views the Colchians' stem: how first on Getes
Sesostris war'd; how frighted with defeat,
Those he transports to Thebes, and famed Nile,
These plants in fields of Phasis, and doth stile
It Colchos: they led to Arnoes towers.
Pharis delights, and earth rich without showers.

In the vanquished Countries he erected Pillars, whereon were engraven (besides the acts that he had done) the figures of men, and on divers the privities of a Woman, to tell us testify the valour of cowardize or the conquered. At his return into Egypt on fellema days, he was drawn by tributary Kings unto the Temples of the gods, which he had adorned with their spoils. He caused many Trenches to be cut thorow the land, and some of them navigable. Whereby unprofitable Marishes were drained, the Country strengthened, Traffick made easie, and such places relieved as laboured with the penury of waters. He attempted to have made a navigable Channe between the Red Sea and the River, afterwards seconded by Darius; but both defiled upon the like suspitions. For that Sea was found to lie higher than Egypt: which made them misdoubt, that it would either drown the Country, or else by mixing with the Nile, dislocate his waters. The marks of their proud endeavours are at this day extant: nevertheless, in some sort long after effected by Philadelphus. Cambyses was the first that made them floop to a foreign yoke, who overthrew their Temples, and massacred their Priests, after that with his own hands he had wounded their Apis, deriding their subverted and bleeding gods, of them and of themselves such innumerable. For which they reported, that he became from thenceforth mad, and had such ill success in his succeeding expedition.

* The Ethiops, Furious Cambyses to the * long liv'd went:
who are said ordi- Fed with the slaughter of his own half-spect, narily to live unto Returned into the East—

—Verfatus in ortus
Carnybes longi populus pervenit ad avi:
Defectusque epulis, & patus caede suorum
—redit
Lucan. l. 20.

In the time of Darius that was called Nothus, they expelled the Persians, and again were governed by Kings of their own. But Ochus reduced them unto their former obedience: continuing so, until Alexander the Great with the rest of the world subdued that Country. After whose death, in the division of his Empire, Egypt fell to Ptolemus the Son of Lagus, and continued in his Family for the space of two hundred and four years, ten Kings, and all of that firmness, succeeding each other. Philadelphus being the second in descent, but first in glory; then Evergetes, Philopater, Epiphanes, Phylometer, Physcon. (so called for his deformity) Lathures and Auleses: who left his Son Dionysius, together with Cleopatra, the Co-heirs of his Scepter. But her, her Brother banished.

Last of the Lagi, worst: now to leave State
To thy incestuous sister, life to Fate.

Ultima Lagum stirpis, perituraque prole
Degenere incestae seipsum cellare tororis.
Lucan. l. 8.

Who trust up in a Mattress, and conveyed by night into a little Boat, unto the Lodging of Caesar lately pursuing Pompey, and then his Murders, with her betwitching blandishments prevailed so well, that she conquered the Conquerour. A fatal Monster unto Zome, and like Sejanus his Horse unto her wretched Lovers: yet made the end unto her life so unanswerable.

Who seeking nobly how to dye
Not like a woman, timorously
Avoids the sword: nor with swift oars
Sought Nile's abstruse and nutrac'd shores,
That with a clear brow durst behold
Her down-cast state: and uncontrol'd
By horror, offer her firm breast
To touch of Asps, and deaths arrest.
More brave in her deliberate end,
Great soul, disdaining to descend
To slavery, and a vassal go
To grace the triumph of her foe.

—Quae generosus
Perire quærens, non muliebrit
Expavit enses, nec latentes
Classe citâ reparavit oras.
Ausa & jacente viscere regiam
Vultu fereno frontis, & asperas
Trachare serpentes: ut aurum
Corpori combiberit venenum.
Deliberata morte ferocior,
Saxis Liburnis scilicet invidens
Privata deduci superbo
Non humilis mulier triumpho.

Hor. l. i. Od. 37.

Her Tragedy acted, Octavius Caesar reduced Egypt into the form of a Province. Under the Roman bondage they received the Christian liberty, by the Ministry of St. Mark the Evangelist. In the division of that Empire they became subject to the Constantinopolitan Emperours. But the Egyptians soon weary of their oppressions, (not long after the impolity of Mahomet) as some say, called in the Saracens to assist them in the expulsion of the Greeks: But howsoever they were expelled by Hamro General to Omar the second Mahometan high Priest, in the year 635. Who only imposing a Tribute, afforded unto all the liberty of Religion. So Egypt became subject unto the

Caliphs

Caliphs of Babylon, until they set up a Caliph of their own: yet reputed for Schismatical. Three hundred and two years the Egyptian Caliphs continued, until the time of Almericus the sixth King of Jerusalem. By him invaded, the Caliph intricated aid of the Sultan of Syria, who sent him Saracco, that repelled the Christians, and by murdering the assisted, usurped his Sovereignty. To him succeeded Saladine, the utter subverter of the Holy-land. Who dying, forbade all Funeral pomp, gave only a shirt to be carried about on the point of a Spear, with this Proclamation:

Great Saladine the Conquerour of the East,
Of all the state and glory he possit,
(O frail and transitory good!) no more
Hath born away, but that poor shirt he wore.

Seventy and six years that Kingdom continued with the Turks, until the Reign of Melec-Sala, who often foiled by the Christians, having lost most of his men, and disfrustring the Egyptians, bought a multitude of Circassian Slaves (a people bordering on the Euxine Sea, heretofore called Getes) of the Tartars which men had overrun that Nation. These he armed, and by their valour not only freed his Country, but gave the French-men a fearful overthrow, taking King Levan Prisoner hard by Damietta. But these Slaves a while after murdered Melec-Sala, and elected a Sultan of their own, tyrannizing over the natural Inhabitants, and still maintaining their power by the yearly purchase of Circassian Children, brought unto Alexander by Rovers and Merchants. These they instructed in the Mahometan Law and exercise of Arms, the Son not succeeding the Father neither in Empire nor Military profession, no not so much as in the name of a Mamuluke. Dreadful in power, and abounding in riches, for two hundred and seventy years they upheld that Government. Overthrown at length by Selymus, the first Turkish Emperour, and after sundry doubtful and mortal conflicts, utterly extinguished; together with their lives, they lost their Dominion to the Conquerour. In whose posterity it remaineth at this day, and is now governed by a Bassa, who hath his residence in Cairo, and commandeth as an absolute Sovereign. Under whom are sixteen Sanziacks, and an hundred thousand Spachiers. The Revenues of this little Country amounting to three millions of Sbariffs. The Great Turk, having one (viz. four hundred thousand disbursed yearly in Sugar and Rice, and sent to Constantinople, the residue sent over-land with a Guard of six hundred Souldiers for fear of the Florentine) another million is spent in pays, and in setting forth the Caravan unto Mecca: the third hath the Bassa for the supportance of his own estate, and entertainment of his dependants. But this is little in regard of that which was raised thereof in the Reign of Anletes, who received seven millions and a half of Crowns, much more supposed to have yielded to the more provident Romans.

The Bassa now being, and called Mahomet, is a man well stricken in years, of a fowre and inflexible nature. At his first entrance he cut off the heads of four thousand Spachiers, that had born themselves too insolently, and committed many outrages and extortions. He sent the great men that bore over-much sway, unto Constantinople: those that refused to go, he caused to be strangled, using the aid of the Arabians (who justly hated the other) in all his executions. If a robbery be committed, and the Thieves escape, such as are appointed to guard those Quarters, do suffer in their stead; in so much as often as they attach poor innocents, when they cannot apprehend the guilty, to deliver themselves from punishment. They bore holes thorow the condemned's arms, stretch wide on Staves, in which are Candles stuck, that burn down into the flesh, and are led in that manner thorow the City, unto the place of execution. Others are stript of their skins, yet live in horrible torment so long as the executioners steel offends not the navel. Drunkennels is punished with death, and all disorders so severely lookt into, that I think in no other place you shall see so few among such a multitude of people. The malice his rigour procured, had caused himself to confine himself to the Castle for a twelve month before our coming to Cairo: but his Government is so well approved of by the Grand Signior, that to do him the more honour, he hath given him his Daughter in Marriage, a Child of four years old, which hath been solemnized with all possible Ceremonies. One thing more is in him praise-worthy, that he will hardly suffer a Christian to turn Mahometan, either out of the dislike of his own Religion, or knowing well that they do it only for commodity and preferment.

Egypt

Egypt is now divided into three Provinces; that which lies South of Cairo, is called Sabid: that between Cairo, Rosetta, and Alexandria; Erriffa; and that between Cairo, Damietta, and Tense, Maremma. Sabid exceedeth the rest in line, all sorts of Pulles, Poultry, and Cattel; Erriffa in Fruits and Rice; and Maremma in Cottons, and Sugar. The Inhabitants of Erriffa and Maremma are more civil than those of Sabid, as more converting with Foreigners; Sabid being only resorted unto by a few Ethiopian. The Pharaohs and ancient Egyptian Nobility did reside in Sabid, the Ptolomies in Erriffa; the Romans and Greeks, along the Sea-coasts. But the Mahometans made the mid of the Land the Seat of their Empire, both the better to keep the whole in subjection, and for fear of the Christians invading the maritime places. The Egyptians of the middle times, were a people degenerating from the worth of their Ancestors; prone to invocations, devoted to luxury, cowardly, cruel; naturally addicted to scoff and to cavil, detracting from whatsoever was gracious and eminent. Those that now inhabit the Country, are for the most part Moors. Turks there are many, and Jews, which reside only in Cities, store of Arabians, and not a few Negroes. Of Christians the native Coptes are the most in number: some Greeks there be, and a few Armenians.

The Egyptian Moors (descended of the Arabians, and understanding each other) are men of a mean stature, tawny of complexion, and spare of body, shrill-tongued, and nimble footed; naturally indolent, affecting more their profit than their ease, yet know they how to live of a little, as in nothing riotous. Rather crafty are they than wise, more observant than faithful; and by much more devout than the Turks in the Mahometan Religion. In Learning they are utterly ignorant. Amongst them none are Noble: few admitted to the Souldiery, (nor suffered in Towns to wear Weapons) not any to Magistracy. In Cities the best of them exercise Merchandise: rich by means of their traffick with the Indians, yet that decayed since our East-Indian Voyages; in so much as Spices brought out of the Levant heretofore, are now with profit brought thither by our Merchants. In habit they differ little from the Turks, excepting some of the younger sort, who wear wide Coats of Linen (the ancient Habit of that Country) girt to their waists, and Towels thrown about the necks of the same. Divers of the Negroes wear Vests like Surplices. The poorer people wear long Garments of hair, streak'd black and white; in the Winter, wide Coats of Cotton. The Beggars by singing, both get relief, and comfort their poverty; playing withall upon Drums which are fashioned like Sieves. A number here be afflicted with sore eyes, either by the reflecting heat, the salt dust of the soil, or excessive venery: for the Pox is incredibly frequent amongst them. The Women, when out of their Houses, are wrapt from the crown of the head to the foot in ample Robes of Linen, spreading their arms underneath to appear more corpulent. For they think it a special excellency to be fat; and most of them are so: so in frequenting the Bamias, for certain days together; wherein they use such diet and frictions, as daily use confirmeth for effectual. They cover their faces with black Cypress bespotted with red. Their under Garments are of lighter Stuffs than the Turkish, but not differing in fashion. The better sort wear hoops of Gold and Silver about their Arms, and above their Ancles: others of Copper; with pieces of Coin half covering their foreheads; and Plates hung about their necks, &c. Both men and Women do brand their arms for the love of each other. Divers of the women I have seen with their Chins distained into knots and flowers of blue, made by pricking of the skin with Needles, and rubbing it over with Ink and the juice of an Herb, which will never wear out again. They have quick and easie labour, bearing heretofore often two, and sometimes three at a burthen; though also born in the eighth Month livings rarely, if elsewhere heard of. In the adjoining Desarts of Saint Macario, a Plant there is, low, leaf-less, brown of colour, branched like Coral, and closed at the top: this, in the time of the labour of women, they set in water, in some corner of the room, which strangely displaith; procuring (as they generally conjecture) easie deliveries. The Country people do follow Husbandry. They are not long in dressing themselves, being only wrapt in a Rustle Mantle: nor have the women any better coverture: hiding their faces with beastly Clouts, having holes for their eyes; which little is too much to see, and abstain from loathing. Over their Shabes the men wear rounds of stiffened Rustle: to defend their brains from the piercing fervour. A people breathes not more savage and nasty; crusted with dirt, and stinking of smoke, by reason of the * fuel, and their Houses which have no Chimnies. Some of them dwell under beggarly Tents, and those esteemed of the old Inhabitants.

Stercus hominum.

I

But

Cal'd commonly and corruptly Copties.

But the Copties are the true Egyptians, retaining the name of Capius that ancient City and Territory, a little below, and on that side of the River where once flood Thebes, against the Island of the Tenteries. The name signifieth Privation; so called, for that there Ifts cut off a lock of her hair, and put on Funeral Garments for the death of Osiris. Others will have them to be called in regard of their Circumcision. These, as I said, are Christians, notwithstanding they are circumcised: whereof they now begin to be ashamed; saying, That in the Country they are therunto compelled by the Moors, and in the Cities, where secure from violence, they use it not: howbeit, doing it rather, in that an ancient Custom of their Nation (mentioned by Herodotus) than out of Religion. They were infected with that Heretic of one Nature in Christ, long before Jacobus (of whom now named, and of whom we shall speak hereafter) divulged it in Syria. At this day they profess him to be perfect God and perfect Man; yet dare not distinguish his Natures, for fear of dividing his person. They baptize not their Children until forty days old. On Saturday presently after midnight, they repair to their Churches, where they remain well-nigh until Sunday at Noon; during which time, they neither sit nor kneel, but support themselves upon Crutches. The Priest is veiled and vested in Linen, having two or three Boys apparelled alike, and sequestered from the rest of the people, to assist him; for they confer inferior Orders upon Children. They sing over most part of the Psalms of David at every meeting, with divers parcels of the Old and New Testaments; the latter as written by Nicomedes: some in the Coptic Language, understood but by few, most in the Moriscus. Often both Priest and People conjoin in savage noises, to our judgments not articulate. The Priest not seldom elevateth a red Cloth (under which, I suppose, is the Sacrament) which they administer in both kinds, and give it to Infants presently after Baptism. In the Churches they have the Picture of our Saviour, and the blessed Virgin, but not over their Altars; nor for any thing I could perceive do they reverence them. In certain Chieftis they preserve the bones and ashes of such as have turned Mahometans, and afterwards recanted, for which they have suffered Martyrdom. At their entrance they kiss their hands, and lay them upon one another; the Women in graced Galleries separated from the men. Extreme Unction, Prayer for the dead, and Purgatory, they admit not of. The Roman Church they hold for heretical, and reject all general Councils after that of Ephesus. Yet a multitude of late have been drawn to receive the Popish Religion (especially in Cairo) by the industry of Fryars: having had the Roman Liturgy sent them from Rome, together with the Bible in the Arabic Language. Of Alexandria hath the Patriarch his name; but his abode is in Cairo. Six days journey above Cairo, up the River, they have a great City called Sais; where Christ and his Mother, was said to have made their abode until the death of Herod: unto which, growing old and sickly, they repair, as desirous to dye there: where there is a goodly Church, though something ruinous: built by Hellen the Mother of Constantine, and consecrated to the blessed Virgin. They never eat in the day time during the Lent, but on Saturdays and Sundays. They wear round Caps, Towels about their necks, and Gowns with wide Sleeves, of Cloth, and Stuffs less ponderous. These live in more subjection than the Moors, by reason of their Religion: and pay yearly a certain sum for their heads to the Bassa; ignorant they are in the excellencies of their Ancestors, but retaining their vices. Some of them profess some knowledge in Magic; being but jugglers, compared with the former, by whom such miracles were effected.

An incredible number of Cities are reported by Authors to have been in this Country: of whom the most famous were Syene, (now Asua) seated under the Tropick of Cancer (in which was a well of marvellous depth, enlightened throughout by the Sun, in the Summer Solstice:) the Regal Thebes destroyed by Cambyses; eighty furlongs long, and built all upon Vaults:

Qua centum portarum sunt: ducenti autem per unamquamque.
Viri egrediantur cum equis & curribus.
— Ubi multæ in domibus opes reconditæ jacent.
Hem. lib. 9.

With hundred Gates: through each two hundred may
On Chariots mounted pass in fair array;
Whose houses much bid treasure hold.

(called after, the City of Jupiter, now shewing some few foundations and reliques of old glories: Memphis, Babylon, and Alexandria: whither it is high time that we return. After Alexander had subdued Egypt, determining to build a City, that might preserve his memory, and to plant it with Grecians, he made election of his Promontory; advised advised (as is said) thereunto by Homer in a dream, who seemed to pronounce these Verses.

An Isle there is by surging Seas embrac'd
Which men call Pharus, before Egypt plac'd.

Insula deinde quædam est valde undosa in Ponto
Ægyptum ante (Pharum vero ipsam vocant.)
Odyss. 4.4.

The Platform for want of Chalk, was laid out with Meal; prognosticating thereby her ensuing felicity: drawn in the figure of a Macedonian Cloak; and afterward walled by Ptolemy. The tides stretching out in length, contained in diameter three thousand seven hundred paces; those in the latitude, a thousand contracted at the ends by narrow isthmuses; here bounded with the Lake, and there with the Sea. The Contriver and Overseer of the work was Democritus. From the Gate of the Sun, unto that of the Moon, on each side of the way flood ranks of Pillars; in the midst a spacious Court, let into by a number of Streets; inasmuch as the people that passed throughout, in some sort did seem to have undertaken a Journey. On the left hand of this flood that part of the City which was named of Alexander; being as it were a City of it self, whose beauty did herein differ: for look how far those Columns directly extended in the former, to did they here, but obliquely placed. So that the sight dispersed through multitudes of ways, and ravished with the magnificence thereof, could hardly be satiated. A wonderful adorning thereunto were the Fane and regal Palaces possessing well nigh a fourth part of the City; for every one did strive to add some Ornament as well to the Houses of their Kings, as to the Temples of their Gods; which stood on the East side of the City, adjoining and participating one with another. Amongst the which was that famous Museum, founded by Philadelphus, and endowed with ample Revenues: planted with such as were eminent in liberal Sciences, drawn thither by rewards, and cherished with favours. He caused the Philosophy of the Egyptians (before all one peculiar to the Priests) to be divulged in Greek for the benefit of Students. He procured seventy of the principal learned amongst the Jews to translate the Bible, called at this day the Septuagint: And erected that renowned Library furnished with seven hundred thousand Volumes, burnt long after by mishap, that time when Cæsar was driven into a narrow exigent by the unlookt for assault of Antony. Renewed and augmented by the Roman Emperours, it flourished until the Mahometans subdued Egypt, and subverted all excellencies with their barbarism. Within a Seraglio called Soma, belonging to the Palaces, the Ptolomies had their Sepulchres, together with Alexander the Great,

Of Macedon, in sacred Vault possess'd,
And under high Piles Royal Ashes rest.

Cum tibi sacro Macedon servator in antro,
Et regum cineres exstructo monte quiescunt.
Lucan. 1.8.

For Ptolemy the Son of Sadus took his Corps from Perdiccas: who bringing it from Babylon, and making for Egypt, with intention to have seized on that Kingdom, upon his approach was glad to betake himself into a desert Island, where he fell (thrust through with javelins) by the hands of his Souldiers: who brought the body unto Alexandria, and buried it in the place aforesaid; then inclosed in a Sepulchre of Gold. But Cybiolates the Cyprian, dispossessing the eldest Daughter of Antony, and in her right possit of the Kingdom, (she being elected Queen) deposed the body of that precious Coverture: when forthwith strangled by Cleopatra, he lived not to enjoy the fruits of his covetousness. After that it was covered with Glass; and so remained until the time of the Saracens. There is yet here to be seen a little Chappel; within a Tomb, much honoured and visited by the Mahometans, where they besow their Alms; supposing his body to lye in that place: Himself reputed a great Prophet, they being informed by their Aleorans.

Against the City stands the Isle of Pharus, which was joined to the Continent by a Bridge (that also served to support an Aquaduct) through which Boats passed from one Haven into another, both made by the benefit of the Island. In a Promontory thereof, on a Rock environed by the Sea, Philadelphus caused a Tower to be built of a wonderful height, ascending by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein Lights burned nightly for a direction to such as sailed by Sea. For the Coasts upon both sides being rocky, low, and harbourless, could not otherwise be approached without eminent danger. Yet divers times the multitude of Lights appearing afar off as one, and mistaken for a Star, procured contrary effects, to the promised safety. This had the repute of the Worlds seventh Wonder, named after the name of the Island. At this day a general name for such as serve to that purpose. Softratus of Gnydos, the ambitious Architect, engraved thereupon this Inscription: SOSTRATUS OF GNYDOS THE SON OF DEXIPHANES, TO THE GODS PROTECTORS FOR THE SAFEGUARD OF SAILERS; which he covereth with Plaster, inscribing the same with the Name and Title of the King: that that soon waiting, his own written in Marble might be celebrated to eternity. This Promontory stretching near unto that of the opposed Continent, doth make a narrow entrance into a dangerous Haven, called the Port of the Tower; before and within there being many Rocks, some covered, and others eminent, which continually trouble the repulsed waters. That on the other side, called the chained up Port, more secure than convenient, is now only reserved for the Turkish Gallies.

On the South-side of the City, and not far removed, is the Lake Marcotis, in time past resembling a Sea both in greatness and profundity. Made by the labour of man, as Herodotus conjectures by the two Pyramids in the middle: being as far under the water as above: that above surmounting it fifty paces. On each there stood a Colossus of stone, adding as much more to the height of the visible building. These were the Sepulchres of King Maris and his Wife, who is said to have digged that Lake, which naturally produces no water; having a dry and sandy bottom, but replenished yearly by the inundations of Nilus, let in by sundry Channels, at whose mouths were flood-gates, to moderate the excess of ebbs and overflows: increasing for six Months together, and for as long diminishing. A work of excessive charge, and incredible performance. To this not much inferior, adjoineth a Labyrinth; in the midst whereof were thirty seven Palaces, belonging to the thirty seven Jurisdictions of Egypt, (whereof ten were in Thebais, ten in Delta, and seventeen in the middle Region) unto which resorted the several Presidents to celebrate the Festivals of their gods (who had therein their particular Temples; moreover fifteen Chappels, containing in each a Nemisis) and also to advise of matters of importance concerning the general welfare. The passages thereunto were thorow Caves of a marvellous length; full of winding paths, dark as Hell, and Rooms within one another; having many doors to confound the memory, and distract the intention; leading into inexplicable error: now mounting aloft, and again re-descending, not seldom turning about walls infolded within one another, in the form of intricate mazes, not possible to thread, or ever to get out without a Conductor. The Building more under the earth than above, being all of massie stone, and laid with that art, that neither Cement nor Wood was employed throughout the universal Fabrick. The end at length attained to, a pair of stairs of ninety steps conducted into a stately Portico supported with Pillars of Theban stone: the entrance into a spacious Hall (a place for their general Conventions) all of polished Marble, adorned with the Statues of gods and men; with others of monstrous resemblances. The Chambers were so disposed, that upon their opening, the doors did give reports no less terrible than Thunder. The first entrance was of white Marble, within throughout adorned with Marble Columns, and diversity of Figures. By this defigured they the perplexed life of man, combred and intangled with manifold mischiefs, one succeeding another: through which impoissible to pass without the conduct of wisdom, and exercise of unfainting fortitude. Dedalus was said to have imitated this, in that which he built in Crete: yet expressing hereof scarce the hundredth part. Who so mounted the top, should see as it were a large plain of stone: and withall those seven and thirty Palaces, environed with solid Pillars, and Walls consisting of stone of a mighty proportion. At the end of this Labyrinth there stood a square Pyramid of a marvellous breadth, and answerable altitude: the Sepulchre of King Ismendes, that built it. About this Lake grew excellent Wines, and long lasting.

— Gemmaeque capaces
Exceperet merum sed non Marcotidos uvæ
Nobile, sed paucis senium cui contulit annis.
Lucan. l. 8.

This Lake affordeth another Haven unto the City, than that of the Sea more profitable by reason of the Commodities of India, the Arabian Gulph, and up-land parts of Egypt, brought down by the convenience of that passage by Channels now utterly — And ample goblets swell,

Not with the generous juice of Grapes that grow
By Marcotis, nor that lasteth so.

utterly ruined. And the same by a narrow cut was joined unto another Lake, far less and nearer the Sea: which at this day too plentifully furnisheth all Turkey with Salt-Petre. Between the less Lake and the City, there passeth an artificial Channel, which serveth them with water (for they have no wells in the time of the deluge: conveyed by Conduits into ample Cisterns (now most of them Fenny for want of use: and occasion of much sickness in the Summer) and so preserved until the succeeding overflow. For Alexandria was all built upon Vaults, supported with carved Pillars one above another, and lined with stone; inasmuch as no small proportion thereof lay concealed in earth, consider we either the cost or quantity.

Such was this Queen of Cities and Metropolis of Africa: but Ab how much different is That Niobe from this

Hec quantum Niobe, Niobe distabat ab illa:
Ovid. Met. l. 6.

who now hath nothing left her but ruins, and those ill witnesses of her perished beauties: declaring rather that Towns as well as men, have their ages and destinies. Only those Walls remain which were founded (as some say) by Proton, one within another, embattelled and garnished with threecore and eight Turrets; rather stately than strong, it compared with the modern. Yet these, by the former descriptions, and ruins without, appear to have endured but a part of the City. After that destroyed by the Saracens, it lay for a long time waste; until a Mahometan Priest, pronouncing (as he said, out of Mahomet's Prophecies) indulgences to such as should re-edifie, inhabit, or contribute money thereunto within certain days, did in a short season re-people it. But a latter destruction it received by the Cypriots, French, and Venetians, about the time that Lewis the Fourth was enlarged by the Sultan, who surprised the City with a marvellous slaughter. But hearing of the approach of the Sultan, (who had raised a great Army for their relief) despairing to maintain it, they set it on fire, and departed. The Sultan repairing the Walls as well as he could, built this Castle that now stands on the Pharus, for the defence of the Haven; and brought it to that state wherein it remaineth. Sundry Mountains are raised of the ruins, by Christians not to be mounted; lest they should take too exact a survey of the City: in which are often found (especially after a shower) rich Stones, and medals engraven with the Figures of their Gods, and men, with such perfection of art, as these now cut, seem lame to those, and unively counterfeits. On the top of one of them stands a Watch-Tower, where continual sentinel is kept, to give notice of approaching sails. Of Antiquities there are few remainders: only an Hieroglyphical Obelisk of Theban Marble, as hard well-nigh as Porphyrie, but of a deeper red, and speckled alike, called Pharaons Needle, standing where once stood the Palace of Alexander: and another lying by, and like it, half buried in Rubbish. Without the Walls, on the South-west side of the City, on a little Hill stands a Column of the same, all of Stone: eighty six Palms high, and thirty six in compass, the Palm consisting of nine Inches and a quarter, according to the measure Genoa, as measured for Zigal Bassa by a Genoise: set upon a square Cube (and which is to be wondered at) not half so large as the foot of the Pillar: called by the Arabians Hemadifstear, which is, the Column of the Arabians. They tell a Fable, how that one of the Protonomies erected the same in the farthest extent of the Haven, to defend the City from Naval incursions, having placed a Magical Glass of Steel on the top; of virtue (if uncovered) to set on fire such Ships as sailed by. But subverted by Enemies, the Glass lost that power, who in this place re-erected the Column. But by the Western Christians it is called, The Pillar of Pompey: and it is said to have been reared by Cesar, as a memorial of his Pompeian Victory. The Patriarch of Alexandria hath here a house adjoining to a Church; which stands (as they say) in the place where Saint Mark was buried, their first Bishop and Martyr: who in the days of Trajan, haled with a Rope tyed about his neck, unto the place called Angelus, was there burned for the testimony of Christ, by the Idolatrous Pagans. Afterward his bones were removed to Venice by the Venetians, he being the Saint and Patron of that City. There be at this day two Patriarchs, one of the Greeks, another of the Circumcised, the universal Patriarch of the Cosnies and Abyssinians. The name of the Greek Patriarch now being, is Cyril, a man of approved virtue and learning, a friend to the Reformed Religion; and opposing the contrary: saying, That the differences between us and the Greeks, be but shells; but that those are kernels between them and the other. Of him something more shall be spoken hereafter. The buildings now being,

ing, are mean and few, erected on the ruins of the former: that part that lieth along the shore inhabited only, the rest desolate: the walls almost quadrangular; on each side a Gate; one opening towards Nilus, another regards Mariotis, the third the Delta of Barcha, and the fourth the Haven. Inhabited by Moors, Turks, Jews, Coptians, and Grecians, more in regard of Merchandize (for Alexandria is a free Port, both for friend and enemy) than for the convenience of the place: seated in a Desert, where they have neither tillage nor pasturage, except what borders on the Lake; that little, and unhusbanded; yet kept they good store of Goats, that have ears hanging down to the ground, which feed amongst the ruins. On the Isle of Pharus, now a part of the Continent, there stands a Castle, defending the entrance of the Haven; which hath no water but what is brought upon Camels from the Cisterns of the City: this, at our coming in, as is the use, we saluted with our Ordnance. As many of us came ashore were brought to the Custom-house, to have our selves and our Valises searched: where ten in the hundred is to be paid for whatsoever we have, and that in kind, only money pays but one and a half; whereof they take an exact account, that thereby they may aim at the value of returned Commodities; then paying eleven in the hundred more, even for such goods as are in property unaltered; at so high a rate is this free Traffick purchased: the Mahometans here paying as much as the Christian. The Customs are farmed by the Jews, paying for the same unto the Bassa twenty thousand Madaens a day, thirty of them amounting to a Royal of eight. We lodged in the house of the French Consul, unto whose protection all Strangers commit themselves. The Cane lockt up by the Turks at noons and nights, for fear that the Franks should suffer or offer any outrage. The Vice-Consul keeps a Table for Merchants: the Consul himself a Magnifico, less liberal of his Presence, than industrious to pleasure; yet rather stately than proud; expecting respect, and meriting good will: that was a Priest, and would be a Cardinal; with the hopes whereof, they say, that he seareth his ambition. By him we were provided of a Janizary for our guard unto Cairo; his hire five pieces of Gold, beside his own diet and his mans; with provision of Powder. For our Asses (not inferior in this Country unto Horses for travel) half a shariff a piece, for our Camels a whole one. At the Gate they took a Madain a head, for our selves and our Asses, so indifferently do they prize us; through which we could not pass without a Tescharia from the Cadee, the principal Officer of this City.

On the second of February in the Afternoon we undertook our journey; passing throw a desert producing here and there a few unhusbanded Palms, Capers, and a weed called Kall by the Arabs. This they use for fuel, and then collect the ashes, which crusted together like a Stone, they sell in great quantity to the Venetians; who equally mixing the same with the Stones that are brought them from Pavia, by the River of Ticinum, make thereof their crystalline Glasses. On the left hand we left divers ruinous Buildings, once said to have been the Royal Mansion of Cleopatra. Beyond which stands Bucharis; once a little, but ancient City; now only shewing her Foundations: where grow many Palms which sustain the wretched people that live thereabouts in beggarly Cottages. There on a Rock a Tower affordeth light by night to the Sailer, the place being full of danger. Anon we passed by a Guard of Souldiers, there placed for the securing of that passage, paying a Madain for every head. Seven or eight miles beyond we ferried over a Creek of the Sea. On the other side stands a handsome Cane, not long since built by a Moor of Cairo, for the relief of Travellers, containing a quadrangle within, and arched underneath. Under one of these Arches we reposed, the Stones our Beds, our Fardels the Bolsters. In such like places they unload their Merchandize, refreshing themselves and their Camels with provision brought with them, secured from Thieves and violence. Giving a trifle for Oil, about midnight we departed, having here met with good store of company; such as were allowed travelling with their Matches light, and prepared to receive all on-fets. The Moors to keep themselves awake, would tell one tale an hundred times over. By the way again we should have paid Capbar, but the benefit of the night excused us. Travelling along the Sea-shore, and at length inclining a little on the right hand, before day we entered Rosetta, repairing to a Cane belonging to the Franks. Our best entertainment an under-room, musty, without light, and the unwholesome floor to lie upon.

This City stands upon the principal branch of the Nile, (called heretofore Canopus), which about some three miles beneath dischargeth it self into the Sea. Having here (as at Damietta) his entrance crossed with a bar of Sand, changing according to

to the changes of the Winds, and beating of the Surges; inasmuch that the Jerbies that pass over, are made without Keels, having flat and round bottoms: a Pilot of the Town there founding all the day long, by whose directions they enter, and that so close unto him, that one leaps out of that Boat into the other to receive Pilotage, and returneth swimming. The Jerbies that can pass over this Bar, may, if well directed, proceed unto Cairo. Rosetta (called Rafid by the Egyptians) perhaps derived of Ros: which signifieth Rice, and so named for the abundance that it uttereth; (they here shealing Monthly three hundred quarters) was built by the Slave of an Egyptian Caliph. The Houses are all of Brick, not old, yet seeming ancient: flat-roof, as generally all be in these hotter Countries, (for the Moors use much to lie on the tops of their Houses) jetting over aloft like the Poops of Ships, to shadow the Streets that are but narrow, from the Suns reflections. Not small, yet of small defence; being destitute of Walls, and other Fortifications. I think no place under Heaven is better furnished with Grain, Fleish, Fish, Sugar, Fruits, Roots, &c. Raw Hides are here a principal commodity, from hence transported into Italy.

In this place, or not much below it, stood that infamous City of Canopus: so called of Canobus Menelaus his Pilot, there buried by his Master, who on these Coasts had suffered ship-wrack. For of all the Princes of Greece that survived the Trojan Wars, not one but mis-carried: either by incensed Seas, or domestic Treasons. As they feign through the rage of Minerva their late Protectress, for the Rape of Cassandra, committed in her Temple; and angry gods, the bootless favourers of subverted Ilium;

—This know

Euboean Rocky, Minerva's adverse Star
And vengeful Caphareus. From Troys War
Toff'd into Sundry shores, to that far land
Stray'd Menelaus, where Proteus Columns stand.

—Sic triste Minerva

Sidus & Eboice cautes, ultorque Caphareus
Militia ex illa diversum ad litus abacti.
Attrides Protei Menelaus ad uique columnas, Exulat, &c.
Virg. En. li. 1.

For Proteus then was King of Egypt: by whom friendly entertained, after eight years wandering, he returned into his Country. Of this place thus speaketh that Prince of Poets;

Happy Inhabiters of Greek Canopus
Where Nile all over spreads with his high flow,
Who ere their fields in painted frigots row.

Nam quæ Pellaz gens fortunata Canopi
Accolis effuso, flagrantem flumine Nilum
Ex circum pictus veltur sua rura phaselis.
Virg. Georg. l. 4.

Throughout the world notorious for luxury, and practised variety of effeminacy, and beastliness. Whereof the Satyre then, dwelling in the Province of Thebais.

The barbarous crew of desam'd Canopus
Mute not the luxury here seen by us.

—Luxuria quantum ipse notavi
Barbara famulo non credit turba Canopo.
Juv. Sat. 25.

For within Canopus stood the Temple of Serapis: to whose often Festivals resorted a world of people from Alexandria down the artificial Channels. Which day and night were well-nigh covered with painted Boats, fraught with men and women: chanting amours, and dedicating their behaviours to the excess of liberty. Of which Pamphilius excusing himself that he

Nor, trading did in loud delights delight
Of Pharian Barges, nor Boys exquisite
In infamies of Nile, whose tongues consent
Unto their gestures, both like impudent.

Non ego mercatus Pharia de puppe loquaces
Delicias, doctumve sui convicia Nili
Infantem, linguaque simul salubrique protervum Dilexi.
Statius. l. 5.

The City it self containing divers Lakes in which were Bowers and places of solace, agreeable to their vanities. Amongst whom (saith Seneca) who so avoided vice avoided not infamy: the very place admitting a suspicion.

The next day but one that followed, we embarked for Cairo, in a Jerbie unto which seven water-men belonged; which we hired for twelve Dollars. This arm of the Nile is as broad at Rosetta, as Thames at Tilbury, straitning by little and little, and then in many places so shallow, that oft we had much ado to free our selves from the flats that had engaged us: the water being ever thick, as if lately troubled troubled; and passing along with a mute and unsteady current. Ten miles above Rosetta is that cut of the River which runs to Alexandria. By the way we often bought as much Filth for six pence, as would have fatished twenty. On each side of the River stand many Towns, but of no great esteem, for the most part opposite: but partly of Brick and partly of Mud; many of the poorer houses appearing like Bee-Hives: seated on little Hills thrown up by the labour of man: to preserve them and their Cattel in the time of the Overflow. Upon the Banks all along are infinite numbers of deep and spacious Vaults, into which they do let the River: drawing up the Water into higher Cisterns, with Wheels set round with Pitchers, and turned about by Buffaloes. From whence it runs along in little trenches made upon the ridges of Banks, and is conveyed into their several grounds, the Country lying all in a level. The winds blew seldom favourable: infomuch as the poor Moors for most part of the way were enforced to hale up the Boat; often wading above their middles to deliver it from the shallows. At every enforcing of themselves (as in all their labours) crying Elongh: persuading that God is near them when they name him, the Devil far off, and all impediments lessened. Of these it is strange to see such a number of broken persons: so being by reason of their strong labour and weak food. The plantain Walks which we had on the shore, made our lingering passage less tedious. The fruitful soil posessing us with wonder; and early maturity of things, there then as forward as with us in June: who begin to reap in the ending of March. The Sugar Canes served our hands for slaves, and tasted our tastes with their Liqueur. By the way we met with Troops of Horsemen: appointed to clear those passages from Thieves, whereof there are many, who also rob by Water in little Frigots. Which made our careful Janizary (for so are most in their undertaken charges) assisted by two other (to whom we gave their passage, who otherwise would have taken it) nightly to keep watch by turns: discharging their Harquebushes in the evening, and hanging out kindled Matches to terrifie the Thieves, and testifie their vigilancy. Five days now almost spent since we first embarked, an hour before Sunset we sailed by the Southern angle of Dahia, where the River divideth into another Branch, not much inferior unto this, the East bounds of that Island (which whether of Asia or Africa, is yet to be decided) entering the Sea, (as hath been said) before below Damietta. Proceeding up the River, about twilight we arrived at Bahae, the Port Town to Cairo, and not two miles distant: where every Frank at his landing is to pay a Dollar. Leaving our Carriages in the Boat, within night we hired six Asses, with their Drivers, for the value of six pence to conduct us unto Cairo; where by an English Merchant we were kindly entertained, who fed and housed us gratis.

Hucha Hibnu Nafih the Arabian, invading a part of Africa, and making himself Lord of the same, built a City in the Desarts, as fearing the treachery of the Africans, some hundred and twenty miles from the ruins of Carthage, which he called Cairo: the name signifieth in the Arabick tongue, a place of Convention: or rather Elchabira, which signifieth a Compeller. From that time the Arabians began to mix with the Moors, from whence this affinity in their speech doth proceed; yet accustomed they in their Songs to mention their Genealogies, and to join with their own names the name of their Nation. This Kingdom for certain years continued in his Family, and grew so great in the days of Elean Caliph, who entered on that Principality and Pridethood in the year of our Lord 996. that he sent out Gebor, by birth a Dalmatian (whom of a Slave he had made of his Council) with a mighty Army; who subdued all Nubidia and Barbary; and in a second expedition conquered both Egypt and Syria. But mistrusting the Forces of Eluir Caliph of Babylon, (to whom the Vice-Caliph of Egypt was fled) he built for a refuge this great, and then strong City, which he named Elchairo in memorial of the other. Scaliger the elder writes, that Gebor built it to fortifie himself against his Master, having rebelled: but Leo the African, that he sent for the Caliph into Barbary, and invetted him in his Conquests. This City is seated on the East-side of the River, at the foot of the Rocky Mountain Muccat: winding therewith, and representing the form of a Crescent: stretching South and North with the adjoining Suburbs, five Italian miles; in breadth scarce one and a half where it is at the broadest. The Walls (if it be walled) rather seem to belong unto private houses than otherwise: yet is the City of a marvellous strength: as appeared by that three days Battel carried through it by Selymus, and maintained by a poor poor remainder of the Mamaluks. For the Streets are narrow, and the Houses high-built, all of Stone, well-nigh to the top: at the end almost of each a Gate; which shut (as nightly they are) make every Street as defensive as a Cattle. The Houses more beautiful without, than commodious within: being ill contrived with combercon passages. Yet are the roofs high pitched: and the uppermost lightly open in the midst, to let in the comfortable air: flat and plaitered above; the Walls surmounting their Roofs, commonly of single Bricks, (as are many of the Walls of the uppermost Stories) which ruined on the top, to such as stand aloft afford a confused spectacle: and may be compared to a Grove of flourishing Trees, that have only leers and perished Crowns. Their Locks and Keys be of Wood, even unto Doors that are plated with Iron. But the private Buildings are not worth the mentioning, if compared to the publick: Of which the Mosques exceed in magnificency: the Stones of many being curiously carved without, supported with Pillars of Marble, adorned with what Art can devise, and their Religion tolerate. Yet differ they in form from those of Constantinople; some being square with open Roofs in the middle of a huge proportion, the covered circle tarrait above: others stretching out in length; and many fitted unto the place where they stand. One built (and that the greatest) by Gebor called Gemish share: He being named Hishare by the Caliph, which signifieth Noble. Of these in this City there is reported to be such a number as passes belief, so that I list not name it. Adjoining unto them are Lodgings for Samons (which are Fools and mad men) of whom we have spoken already. When one of them dye, they carry his body about in Procession, with great rejoycings: whose soul they suppose to be wrapt into Paradise. Here be also divers goodly Hospitals, both for Building, Revenue, and Attendance: amongst which, that built by Pijhor the first Sultan of the Mamaluks, is most remarkable; endowed by him with the yearly Revenue of two hundred thousand Shariffs. Next to these in beauty are the great mens Seraglios: by which if a Christian ride, they will pull him from his Ass (for they prohibit us Horses, as not worthy to besetride them) with indignation and contumely. The Streets are unpaved, and exceeding dirty after a shower (for here it raineth sometimes in the Winter, contrary to the received opinion, and then most subject to Plagues) over which many beams are laid athwart on the tops of Houses, and covered with Mats, to shelter them from the Sun. The like coverture there is between two high Mosques in the principal Street of the City: under which, when the Bassa passeth, or others of Quality, they shoot up Arrows, which stick above in abundance. The occasion of that Custom I know not. During our abode in the City, fell out the Feast of their little Byram, when in their private Houses they slaughter a number of Sheep; which cut in goblets, they distribute unto their Slaves and to the poorer sort of people, besmearing the doors with their blood: perhaps in imitation of the Passover. The Nile (a mile distant) in the time of the inundation, by sundry Channels flows into the City. When these Channels grow empty, or the water corrupted, they have it brought them thenceforth from the River, by Camels. For although they have many Wells, yet is the water bad, and good for no other use than to cool the Streets, or to cleanse their Houses. In the heart of the Town stands a spacious Cane, which they call the Bejistan, in which (as in those at Constantinople) are sold all kind of Wares of the finer sort: selling old things by the call of, Who gives more? imitating therein the Venetians, or imitated by them. Three principal Gates thereby to this City: Beh. Naufree, or the Gate of Victory, opening towards the Red Sea; Beh. Zuella, leading to Nilus and the old Town (between these the chief Street of the City doth extend) and Behel Fumali, or the Port of Triumph, on the North of the City, and opening to the Lake called Ezbikie. Three sides thereof are inclosed with goodly Buildings, having Galleries of pleasure which jet over sustained upon Pillars. On the other side (now a heap of ruins) stood the stately Palace of Dulstibie, Wife to the Sultan Caishure: in which were doors and jaums of Ivory; the Walls and Pavements checkered with discoloured Marble: Columns of Porphyry, Alabaster, and Serpentine: the Cielings flourished with Gold and Azure, and in-laid with Indian Ebony, a Wood affirmed to be only proper to that Country.

*India only doth enjoy
The growing sable Ebony.*

—Sola India nigrum
Fert Ebenum —
Virg. Geor. l. 2.

Yet manifest it is, that there grew thereof by the Lake Mareotis,

Nor

—Hebenus Marcotica vastos
Non operit postes.
Lucan. 10.

And in the Island of Meroes,

—nigris Meroen fecunda colonis,
L. x. comis hebeni.—
Ibid.

—Nor are the mighty Pillars wrought,
With Ebony from Marcotis brought.

Black peop'd Meroes (benn'd with Rocks),
Exulting in her Ebony locks.

a Tree, which being cut down, almost equals a Stone in hardness. In a word, the magnificency was such as could be devised or effected by a Woman's curiosity, and the Purse of a Monarch. Levelled with the ground by Solyinus, the Stones and Ornaments thereof were conveyed unto Constantinople. The Lake both square and large, is but only a Lake when the River over-floweth; being joined thereunto by a Channel: where the Moors, (rowed up and down in Barges, shaded with Damasks and Stuffs of India) accustom to solace themselves in the Evening. The water fallen, yet the place rather changeth than loseth its delightfulness: affording the profit of five Harvests in a year, together with the pleasure; frequented much in the cool of the day. I cannot forget the injury received in this place, and withall the Justice. Abused by a beggarly Moor (for such only will) who then but seemed to begin his Knavery, we were glad to fly unto another for succour, seeming a man of good fort; and by killing of his Garment, insinuated into his favour; who rebuked him for the wrong he did us. When crossing us again, ere we had gone far, he used us far worse than before. We offered to return to the other, which he hearing, interposed: doing us much villany, to the meriment of the beholders, esteeming of Christians as of Dogs and Infidels. At length we got by, and again complained; He in a marvellous rage made his Slaves to pursue him; who caught him, stript him, and beat him with rods all along the level; calling us to be lookers on, and so conveyed him to the place of correction; where, by all likelihood, he had an hundred blows on the feet to season his pastimes. Beyond this, are a number of straggling Houses extending well-nigh to Bolae, which is the Key unto Cairo: a large Town, and stretching along the River, in fashion of building, in some part not much inferior to the other. Within and without the City are a number of delicate Orchards, watered as they do their Fields, in which grow variety of excellent Fruits: as Oranges, Lemmons, Pomegranates, Apples of Paradise, Sicamore Figs, and others (whose Barks they bore full of holes, the Trees being as great as the greatest Oaks, the Fruit not growing amongst the Leaves, but out of the Bole and Branches) Dates, Almonds, Cassia fistula, (leaved like an Ash, the Fruit hanging down like Sausages; Locust, flat, and the form of a Cycle) Galls growing upon Tamarix, Apples no bigger than Berries, Plantains, that have a broad flaggy leaf growing in Clusters, and shapen like Cucumers, the rind like a Peccod, solid within, without Stones or Kernels, to the taste exceeding delicious, (this the Mahometans say was the forbidden Fruit; which being eaten by our first Parents, and their nakedness discovered unto them, they made thin Aprons of the leaves thereof) all the year, and many more not known by name, nor seen by me elsewhere: some bearing Fruit all the year, and almost all of them their leaves. To these add those whole Fields of Palms; (and yet no prejudice to the under-growing Corn) of all others most delightful.

In the aforesaid Orchards are great numbers of Camellions; yet not easily found, in that near to the colour of that whereon they sit. A creature about the bigness of an ordinary Lizard. His head unproportionably big, his eyes great and moving, without the writhing of his neck which is inflexible: his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent as nearer the belly; his tail slender and long: on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside: slow of pace, but swiftly intending his tongue, of a marvellous length for proportion of his body, wherewith he preys upon flies, the top whereof being hollowed by Nature for that purpose. So that deceived they be, who think that they eat nothing, but only live upon air; though surely air is their principal sustenance. For those that have kept them for a whole year together, could never perceive that they fed upon any thing else; and might observe their bellies to swell after they had drawn in the air, and closed their jaws, which they expand against the Rays of the Sun. Green they be of colour, and of a dusky yellow; brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. They change not into all colours as reported:

reported; laid upon green, the green predominates; upon yellow the yellow: but laid upon blue, or red, or white, the green retaineth his hue notwithstanding, only the other spots receive a more orient lustre: laid upon black, they look black, yet not without a mixture of green. All of them in all places are not coloured alike. They are said to bear a deadly hatred to the Serpent: inasmuch as when they espy them basking in the Sun, or in the shade, they will climb to the over-hanging branches, and let down from their mouths a thread, like to that of a Spider, having at the end a little round drop which shineth like Quick-silver, that falling on their heads doth destroy them: and what is more to be admired, if the boughs hang not so over, that the thread may perpendicularly descend, with their former feet they will so direct it, that it shall fall directly. Aloft, and near the top of the Mountain, against the South end of the City, stands the Castle, (once the stately Mansion of the Mamluck Sultans, and destroyed by Solyinus) ascended unto by one way only, and that hewn out of the Rock, which rising leisurely with easie steps and spacious distances, (though of a great height) maybe on Horseback without difficulty mounted. From the top, the City by reason of the Palms dispersed throughout, appeareth most beautiful; the whole Country below lying open to the view. The Castle so great, that it seemeth a City of it self, immured with high Walls, divided into partitions, and entered by doors of Iron; wherein are many spacious Courts, in times past the places of exercise. The ancient Buildings all ruined, do only shew that they have been sumptuous; there being many Pillars of solid Marble yet standing, and of so huge a proportion, that how they came thither is not least to be wondered at. Here hath the Bassa his residence, wherein the Divan is kept on Sundays, Mondays, and Tuesdays: the Chasufs as Advocates, preferring the suits of their Clients. Forty Janizaries he hath of his Guard, attired like those at Constantinople: the rest employed about the Country, for the most part are not the Sons of Christians; yet faithful unto such as are under their charges; whom, should they betray, they not only lose their lives, but also the pay which is due to their posterity. Such is this City, the fairest in Turkey, yet differing from what it was, as from a body being young and healthful, doth the same grown old and wasted with diseases.

Hither, the sacred thirst of gain, and fear of poverty, allureth the adventurous Merchant from far removed Nations: by reason of the Trade with India, and neighbourhood of the Red Sea; being from hence not past two days journey: so called of Erythra an Egyptian King, which signifieth Red in that language. Yet little is the Turk advantaged thereby: slothful, of a gross conceit to devise new ways unto profit; and unexpected in Navigation; which to an industrious and knowing people would afford an unspeakable benefit. Nevertheless they have here a Haven called Sues, heretofore Arfnoer, flourishing and abounding with Merchandise in the time of the Ptolomies. Built by Philadelphus, and so named in honour of his Sister, a Lady of surpassing beauty, given in marriage to Lysimachus King of Macedon. The Sea there being at a low water, no broader than a River: and every where dangerous to sail through, by reason of the multitude of shelves and undiscoverable Rocks. Speaking of this Sea, I cannot but remember the wonderful project of Cleopatra, who flying from the Battel of Actium, and gathering together all her portable riches, attempted to have hoist her shipping out of the Mid-land-sea, and to have haled them into this; with purpose to have planted in another Country, removed far from the danger and bondage threatened by that War: but the coming of Anthony altered her purpose. Now it is a place of small Commerce, and inhabited by a few in regard of the scarcity of all manner of provision, and penury of waters. Yet is there a station for Gallies, being in number about five and twenty. These are brought from Constantinople unto Cairo; and taken in pieces, are carried unto Sues upon Camels, and there put together. But the main of Commodities which come to Cairo, are brought over land by Caravan from Mecha; as precious Stones, Spices, Stuffs of India, Indico, Gums, Amber, all sorts of Perfumes, &c. But the English have so ill utterance for their warm Clothes in these hot Countries, that I believe they will rather suffer their Ships to rot in the River, than continue that Trade any longer.

Now Cairo this great City is inhabited by Moors, Turks, Negroes, Jews, Coptes, Greeks, and Armenians; who are here the poorest, and every where the honestest: labouring painfully, and living soberly. Those that are not subject to the Turk, if taken in Wars, are freed from bondage: who are, live freely, and pay no tribute of Children as do other Christians. This privilege enjoy they, for that a certain certain Armenian foretold of the greatness and glory of Mahomet. They once were under the Patriarch of Constantinople: but about the Heretic of Eutyches, they fell from his Government and Communion with the Grecians, whom they detest above all other: re-baptizing such as convert to their Sect. They believe that there is but one Nature in Christ, not by a communion of the Divine with the Humane, as Eutyches taught, but by a conjunction: even as the soul is joined to the body. They deny the real presence in the Sacrament, and administer it as the Coptics do: with whom they agree also, concerning Purgatory, and not praying for the dead: as with the Greeks, that the Holy Ghost proceedeth only from the Father, and that the dead neither do, nor shall feel joy or torment until the day of Doom. Their Patriarch hath his being at Tyberis in Perfia: in which Country they live wealthily, and in good estimation. There are three hundred Bishops of that Nation. Priests marry not twice; eat flesh but five times a year; and then, left the people should think it a sin to eat in regard of their abstinence. They err that write, that the people abstain from all meats prohibited by the Mosaic Law; for Hogs flesh they eat where they can without offence to the Mahometans. They observe the Lent most strictly: yet eat flesh upon Fridays between Easter and Whitsunday. As for Images they adore them not. Here they have their Assemblies in obscure Chambers. Coming in (which was on a Sunday in the Afternoon) we found one sitting in the midst of the Congregation, in habit not differing from the rest, reading on a Bible in the Chaldean Tongue. Anon the Bishop entered in a Hood and Vest of black, with a Staff in his hand; to which they attributed much holiness. First, he prayed, and then sung certain Psalms, assisted by two or three; after all sung jointly, at interims praying to themselves; resembling the Turks in the posture of their bodies, and after prostrations: the Bishop excepted; who erecting his hands, stood all the while with his face to the Altar. The Service ended, one after another do kiss his hand, and bestow their Alms, he laying the other on their heads, and blessing them. Lastly, he prescribed succeeding Fasts and Festivals: where is to be noted, that they fast upon the day of the Nativity of our Saviour.

Here also is a Monastery of Greek Coloicras, belonging unto the Capital Monastery of Saint Katherine of Mount Sinai, from Cairo some eight days journey over the Deserts. She is said to be the Daughter of King Cyfra, a King of Cyprus, who in the time of Maxentius converted many unto Christ. Tortured on a Wheel, and finally beheaded at Alexandria (where two goodly Pillars of Theban Marble (though half swallowed with ruins,) reserve the memory of the place) she was conveyed (as they affirm) by an Angel, and buried in this Mountain. It hath three tops of a marvellous height: that on the West side, of old called Mount Horeb, where God appeared to Moses in a Bush; fruitful in Pasturage, far lower, and shadowed when the Sun ariseth to the middlemost: which is that wherein God gave the Law unto Moses. The Monastery stands at the foot of the Mountain, resembling a Castle, with an Iron door; wherein they shew the Tomb of the Saint much visited by Pilgrims, from whence the top by fourteen thousand steps of Stone is ascended, where stands a ruined Chappel. A plentiful Spring descendeth from thence, and watering the Valley below, is again drunk up by the thirsty sand. This strong Monastery is to entertain all Pilgrims, (for there is no other place of entertainment) having an annual revenue of 60000 Dollars from Christian Princes. Of which foundation six and twenty other depend, dispersed through divers Countries. They give also daily alms to the Arabs, to be the better secured from outrage. Yet they will not suffer them to enter, but let it down from the Battlements. Their Orchard aboundeth with excellent Fruits: amongst which are Apples rare in these Countries, transferred from Damasco. They are neither subject to Pope nor Patriarch; but have a Superintendent of their own, at this present in Cairo. These here made us a Collation, where I could not but observe their gulling in of Wine with a dear felicity; whereof they have their provision from Candy.

Four Sects of Mahometans there were in the time of Leo Africanus, in this City: sprung in times past from four several Interpreters of the Alcoran; who will not easily relinquish their opinions. Yet do they not traduce one another, although they repute each other for heretical. That called Chensia is the principal; whose Priests do feed on Horse-flesh. Such Horses as are unfit for service their Caterers do buy, and fat for their Palats. Each Sectary is punished for transgressions against the rules of their Religion by the Judge of that Order.

During

During our abode here, a Caravan went forth with much solemnity, to meet and relieve the great Caravan in their return from Mecha; which consisteth of many thousands of Pilgrims that travel yearly thither in devotion and for merchandize; every one with his ban-roll in his hand: and their Camels gallantly tricked, (the Alcoran carried upon one in a precious case covered over with Needle-work, and laid on a rich Pillow, environed with a number of their chanting Priests) guarded by divers Companies of Souldiers, and certain Field-pieces. Forty calve days journey it is distant from hence: divided by a Wilderness of Sand, that lyeth in drifts, and dangerously moveth with the wind: through which they are guided in many places by Stars, as Ships in the Ocean. Now within three days journey they ascend a Mountain (the same, they say, where Abraham would have sacrificed Isaac.) Here sacrifice they a number of Sheep: and stripping themselves, wrapt only in a Mantle without knot or hem, proceed unto Mecha. Where is a little Chappel (within a goodly Mosque) about eight yards square: the cause of this devotion, (towards which, when they pray, wherefoever they be, they do return their faces) built, as they affirm, by Abraham: within, it is hung with Crimson Sattin, and veiled about with a richer stuff, (thither yearly by the Emperor, (as to that of Medina, Tahnaby.) provided at Cairo; the * Emer of Mecha having the old for his fee. The Camels that bring them, are from thenceforth freed from Burthens. But a sight it is no less strange than ridiculous, to behold the honour they do unto the Camel at his return unto Constantinople, that supported their Alcoran, (as at Cairo in some sort to that that carried the veltures) crowding about him, as led through the Streets: some pulling off his hairs, and preserving them as Reliques; some killing, others with his sweat besmearing their eyes and faces: and cutting him at length into little Gobbets, give thereof to eat unto their Friends and Familiars. Many of the Pilgrims by poising on hot Bricks, do voluntarily petish their fights, as desiring to see nothing profane, after so sacred a spectacle. He that at his return giveth over the World, and himself to contemplation, is esteemed as a Saint: all are called * Hedges; and so call they their Camels; hanging as many little Chains about their fore-legs, as they have been times there. In that City of Mecha, some say, their false Prophet was born; but erroneously. Seated it is in a pleasant soil, but environed with deserts and hills; having no water but what proceedeth from one Spring, which they say was shewed by an Angel unto Hagar; and almost miraculous it is that it should suffice such a multitude of people and cattle. A place of principal traffick; not only by the means of the Indian Caravans, which thither yearly repair with their Commodities; but of the Country adjoining, whose precious productions have infused it happy.

— In Costus, Amomum,
And * Cinnamon, rich let Panchais be:
Bear's incense and rare flowers; so it bear thee,
O Myrrhe—

— sic dives Amomo,
Cinnamome costumque suam, sudaque ligno
Thura ferat floreque alios Panchais rellus:
Eum feret & myrrham. Ovid. Met. l. 10.
* Now no Cinnamon grows in Arabia.

Into which the Poets feign that the incestuous Lady was converted.

Who though the lost sense with her form, yet the Weeps still, and warm drops fall from the sad tree;
Tears of high value, which retain as yet
Their Misfortunes name whom no Age shall forget.

Et quantum amittit veteres cum corpore sensus
Hec rament, & tepide manant ex arbore guttae.
Est honor in lachrymis, stilla aque coram Mytina
Nomen herile tenet, nulloque cacebit ævo,
Idem.

The Christian dyeth that approacheth this place within five miles compass. After fourteen days they return unto the aforesaid Mountain; a part of them parting from the rest, going out of the way to Medina Tahnabi, which is by interpretation, The City of the Prophet; famous for concourse of people; though in a barren Country; scarce two days journey from Mecha. Where in a little Chappel lighted with three thousand Lamps that there burn perpetually, lie Mahomet, Omer, and Isly; in simple Tombs of the ancient fashion, cut out like Lozenges. That of Mahomet (not hanging in the air, as reported) is covered with green, having on the top a Caruncle as big as an Egg, which yields a marvellous lustre. These meet again with the rest of the Caravan at the place appointed.

But to digress no farther. Than Cairo no City can be more populous, nor better served with all sorts of provision. Here hatch they Eggs by artificial heat in infinite

K

infinite numbers; the manner as seen thus briefly. In a narrow entry on each side stood two rows of Ovens, one over another. On the Floors of the lower, they lay the offals of Flax; over those Mats, and upon them Eggs; at least six thousand in an Oven. The floors of the upper Ovens were as roofs to the under: grated over like Kilns, only having Tunnels in the middle, with Covers unto them. These gratings are covered with Mats, on them, three Inches thick, lyeth the dry and pulverized dung of Camels, Buffaloes, &c. At the higher and farther sides of those upper Ovens, are Trenches of Lome; a handfull deep, and two handfulls broad. In thic they burn of the foresaid dung, which giveth a smothering heat, without visible Fire. Under the mouths of the upper Ovens are Conveyances for smoke: having round roots, and vents at the top to shut and to open. Thus lie the Eggs in the lower Ovens for the space of eight days: turned daily, and carefully lookt to, that the heat be but moderate. Then call they the bad from the good, by that time distinguishable (holding them between a lamp and the eye) which are two parts of the three for the most part. Two days after they put out the fire, and convey by the passage in the middle, the one half into the upper Ovens: then shutting all close, they let them alone for ten days longer; at which time they become discolored in an instant. This they practise from the beginning of January until the middle of June, the Eggs being then most fit for that purpose, neither are they (as reported) prejudiced by Thunder: yet these declare that intimated Nature will never be equalled; all of them being in some part defective or monstrous.

Molt of the Inhabitants of Cairo consists of Merchants and Artificers: yet the Merchants frequent no foreign Martts. All of a Trade keep their Shops in one place, which they shut about the hour of five, and solace themselves for the rest of the day, Cooks excepted, who keep theirs open till late in the evening. For few but such as have great Families dress meat in their Houses, which the men do buy ready dress, the women too fine fingered to meddle with Houliwry, who ride abroad upon pleasure on easie going Asses, and tye their Husbands to the benevolence that is due; which, if neglected they will complain to the Magistrate, and procure a divorcement. Many Practitioners here are in Physick, invited therunto by the store of Simples brought hither, and here growing: an art wherein the Egyptians have excelled from the beginning.

Talia Jovis filia habebat pharmaca utilis
Bona, quæ illi Polydamnon præbuit Theonis uxor
Ægyptica, quæ prima producit fertili terra
Pharmaca, plurima quidem salubria mixta, multa lethalia.
Medicus vero unusquisque peritus supra omnes
Homines: sane enim Pæonius fuit ex generatione.
Hom. Odys. l. 4.

Such Helens poison was, a friend to life:
Egyptian Polydamnon's gift, Theon's Wife.
That fruitful soil doth many Drugs produce,
Hurtful and healthful fit for every use;
All are Physicians, expert above all:
And fetcht from Pæon their original.

A kind of Rue is here, much in request, wherewith they perfume themselves in the mornings; not only a preservative against infection, but also a cure prevalent against hurtful spirits. So the Barbarians of old accustomed to do with the roots of wild Galingal. There are in this City, and have been of long, a sort of people that do get their livings by shewing of feats with Birds and Beasts, exceeding therein all such as have been famous amongst us: I have heard a Raven speak so perfectly, as hath amazed me. They use both their throats and tongues in uttering of sounds, which other Birds do not: and therefore more fit for that purpose. Sealiger the Father, reports of one that was kept in a Monastery hard by him; which when hungry, would call upon Conrade the Cook so plainly, as often mistaken for a man. I have seen them make both Dogs and Goats, to let their four feet on a little turned Pillar of wood about a foot high, and no broader at the end than a palm of a hand: climbing from one to two, set on the top of one another, and so to the third and fourth; and there turn about as often as their Masters would bid them. They carry also dancing Camels about, taught when young, by setting them on the hot hearth, and playing all the while on an Instrumēt, the poor beast through the extremity of heat, lifting up his feet one after another. This practise they for certain Months together: so that at length whensoever he heareth the Fiddle, he will fall a dancing. Asses they will teach to do such tricks, as if possessed with reason: to whom Bank his Horse would have proved but a Zany.

The time of our departure prorogued, we rode to Matarca: five Miles North-east of the City. By the way we saw land call upon the Earth, to moderate the fertility.

Here

Here they say, that our Saviour and the blessed Virgin, with Joseph, reposed themselves, as they fled from the fury of Herod; when oppressed with thirst, a Fountain forthwith burst forth at their feet to refresh them. We saw a well environed with a poor Mud-wall, the Water drawn up by * Buffalo's into a little Cistern; from whence it ran into a Laver of Marble within a small Chappel, by the Moor's (in contempt of Christians) spitefully defiled. In the wall there is a little concave lined with sweet Wood (diminished by affectors of Reliques) and smothered with Incense: in the sole, a Stone of Porphyry, whereon (they say) he did set our Saviour. Of so many thousand Wells (a thing most miraculous) this only affordeth gustable Waters: and that so excellent, that the Ass's retulsthe River to drink thereof, and drinks of no other; and when they cease for any time to exhaust it, it sendeth forth of it self plentiful a stream, as is able to turn an Over-fall Mill. Passing through the Chappel, it watereth a pleasant Orchard; in a corner whereof there standeth an over-grown Fig-tree, which opened (as they report) to receive our Saviour and his Mother, then hardly escaping the pursuers, closing again till the pursuit was past; then again dividing, as now it remaineth. A large hole there is through one of the sides of the leaning bulk; this (they say) no ballard can thread, but shall stick fast by the middle. The Tree is all to be hackt for the Wood thereof, reputed of sovereign virtue. But I abuse my time, and provoke my Reader. In an inclosure adjoining, they shewed us a Plant of Balm; the whole remainder of that store which this Orchard produced; destroyed by the Turks, or envy of the Jews, as by the other reported; being transported out of Jury, in the days of Herod the Great, by the commandment of Antonius, at the suit of Cleopatra; but others say, brought hither out of Arabia Felix, at the cost of a Saracen Sultan.

A day or two after, we crossed the Nilus. Three miles beyond on the left hand left we the place, where upon Good Friday, the Arms and Legs of a number of men appear stretched forth of the earth, to the astonishment of the multitude. This I have heard confirmed by Christians, Mahometans, and Jews, as seen upon their several Faiths. An imposture perhaps contrived by the Water-men, who fetching them from the Mummers (whereof there are an un-consumable number) and keeping the mystery in their Families, do stick them over-night in the sand; obtaining thereby the yearly Ferrying over of many thousands of Passengers. Three or four miles farther, on the right hand, and in sight, athwart the Plain, there extendeth a Causey supported with Arches, five Furlongs long, ten paces high, and five in breadth, of smooth and figured Stone; built by the Builder of the Pyramids, for a passage over the soft and unsupporting earth with weighty Carriages. Now having ridden over a goodly Plain, some twelve miles over, (in that place the whole breadth of Egypt) we came to the foot of the Lybian Desarts.

Full West of the City, close upon those Desarts, aloft on a rocky level adjoining to the Valley, stand those three Pyramides (the barbarous Monuments of prodigality and vain-glory) so universally celebrated. The name is derived from a flame of fire in regard of their shape, broad below, and sharp above, like a pointed Diamond. By such the Ancient did express the original of things; and that formless form-taking substance. For as a Pyramid beginning at a point, and the principal height by little and little dilateth into all parts: so Nature proceeding from one undividable Fountain (even God the Sovereign Essence) receiveth diversity of Forms; effused into several kinds and multitudes of Figures; uniting all in the Supreme head, from whence all excellencies issue. The labours of the Jews, as themselves report, and is alleged by Josephus, were employed in these; which deserveth little better credit (for what they built was of Brick) than that absurd opinion of Naxiastenzus; who, out of the consonancy of the names, affirmeth, that they were built by Joseph for Granaries, against the seven years of Famine; when as one was thrice seven years, having one, in erecting. But by the testimony of all that have writ, amongst whom Lucan,

When high Pyramides do grace
The Ghosts of Ptolemies lewd race:

Quam Ptolemaeorum manes ferient; pudenda
Pyramides claudant. l. 8.

and by what shall be said hereafter, most manifest it is that these, as the rest, were the regal Sepulchres of the Egyptians. The greatest of the three, and chief of the worlds seven wonders, being square at the bottom, is supposed to take up eight Acres of ground. Every square being 300 single paces in length, the square at the top,

K 2

consisting

* Salanicus tom.
10. c. 6.
darestore-part (as the saith himself seeing
it) that from Sunday at noon until Monday morning they will not labour in the drawing up of water, though urged with stripes.

consisting of three Stones only, yet large enough for threecore to stand upon, ascended by two hundred fifty five steps, each step above three feet high, of a breadth proportionable. No Stone so little throughout the whole, as to be drawn by our Carriages: yet were these hewn out of the Trojan Mountains far off in Arabia; so called of Captive Trojans brought by Menelaus unto Egypt, and there afterward planted. A wonder how conveyed hither: how so mounted, a greater. Twenty years was it building; by three hundred threecore and six thousand men continually wrought upon: who only in Radishes, Garlick, and Onions, are said to have consumed one thousand and eight hundred Talents. By these and the like inventions exhausted they their Treasure, and employed the people; for fear lest such infinite wealth should corrupt their Successors, and dangerous idleness beget in the Subject a desire of innovation. Besides, they considering the frailty of man, that in an instant buds, blows, and withereth; did endeavour by such sumptuous and magnificent Structures, in spite of death to give unto their fames eternity. But vainly:

*Nam neque Pyramidum somptus ad Sydera ducti, Not sumptuous Pyramids to Skies up-rear'd, Nec Jovis Elzi cælum imitata domus, Nor Elean Joves proud Fane, which Heaven competer'd, Nec Mausolæi dives fortuna sepulchri, Nor the right fortune of Mausolus Tomb, Morris ab extrema conditione vacante, Are priviledg'd from death's extremest doom:
Aut illis flamma, aut imber subducat honores, Or fire, or worms, their glories do abate, Annorum aut istu pondere victa ruent. Or they, age-shaken, fall with their own weight.*
Proper. l. 3. Eleg. 3.

Yet this hath been too great a morsel for time to devour; having stood, as may be probably conjectured, about three thousand and two hundred years: and now rather old than ruinous: yet the North-side is most worn, by reason of the humidity of the Northern wind, which is here the moisteft. The top at length we ascend, with many pauses and much difficulty; from whence, with delighted eyes, we beheld that Sovereign of Streams, and most excellent of Countries. South-ward and near hand the Mummies: afar off divers huge Pyramids; each of which, were this away, might supply the repute of a wonder. During a great part of the day, it casteth no shadow on the earth, but is at once illuminated on all sides. Descending again, on the East-side below, from each corner equally distant, we approached the entrance, seeming heretofore to have been closed up, or so intended, both by the place it self, as appeareth by the following Picture and conveyances within. Into this our Janizaries discharged their Haquebushes, lest some should have skulked within to

to have done us a mischief; and guarded the mouth whilst we entred, for fear of the wild Arabs. To take the better footing, we put off our shoes, and most of our apparel; fore-told of the heat within not inferior to a Stove. Our guide (a Moor:) went foremost: every one of us with our lights in our hands. A most dreadful passage, and no less cumberfom; not above a yard in breadth, and four feet in height, each stone containing that measure. So that always stooping, and sometimes creeping, by reason of the rubbish, we descended (not by stairs, but as down the steep of a hill) a hundred feet, where the place for a little circuit enlarged, and the fearful descend continued, which they say none ever durst attempt any farther, save that a Bassa of Cairo, curious to search into the secrets thereof, caused divers condemned persons to undertake the performance, well stored with lights, and other provision; and that some of them ascended again well-nigh thirty miles off in the Desarts. A Fable devised only to beget wonder. But others have written, that at the bottom there is a spacious Pit, eighty and six Cubits deep, filled at the over-flow by concealed Conduits: in the midst a little Island, and on that a Tomb containing the body of Cheops, a King of Egypt, and the builder of this Pyramid: which with the truth hath a greater affinity. For since I have been told by one out of his own experience, that in the uppermost depth there is a large square place, (though without water) into which he was led by another entry opening to the South, known but unto few (that now open, being shut by some order) and entred at this place where we feared to descend. A turning on the right hand leadeth into a little room: which by reason of the noysom favour and uneasy passage, we refused to enter. Clambering over the mouth of the aforesaid dungeon, we ascended as upon the bow of an arch, the way no larger than the former, about an hundred and twenty feet

K 3

Here

Here we pass'd thorow a long entry, which led directly forward; so low, that it took even from us that uneasy benefit of flopping. Which brought us into a little Room with a compact Roof, more long than broad, of polished Marble; whole Grave-like smell, half full of Rubbidge, forced our quick return. Climbing also over this entrance, we ascended as before, about an hundred and twenty feet higher. This entry was of an exceeding height, yet no broader from side to side than a man may fathom; benched on each side, and closed above with admirable Architecture: the Marble so great, and so cunningly joined, as it had been hewn through the living Rock. At the top we entered into a goodly Chamber, twenty foot wide, and forty in length: the Roof of a marvellous height, and the Stones so great, that eight floors it, eight roofs it, eight flag the ends, and sixteen the sides, all of well-wrought Theban Marble. A'thwart the Room at the upper end there standeth a Tomb, uncovered, empty, and all of one Stone; brekt high, seven feet in length, not four in breadth, and sounding like a Bell. In this (no doubt) lay the body of the builder. They erecting such costly Monuments, not only out of a vain ostentation, but being of opinion, that after the dissolution of the flesh the soul should survive; and when thirty six thousand years were expired, again be joined unto the self-same body restored unto his former condition, gathered in their concepts from Astronomical demonstrations. Against one end of the Tomb, and close to the wall, there openeth a Pit with a long and narrow mouth, which leadeth into an under Chamber. In the walls on each side of the upper Room there are two holes, one opposite to another; their ends not discernable, nor big enough to be crept into; sooty within, and made as they say, by a flame of fire which darted thorow it. This is all that this huge mass containeth within his darksome entrails; all, at least to be discovered. Herodotus reports that King Cheops became so poor by the building thereof, that he was compelled to prostitute his daughters; charging her to take whatsoever he could get, who affecting her particular glory, of her several customers demanded several stones, with which he erected the second Pyramid, far less than the former, smooth without, and not to be entered. The third which standeth on the higher ground, is very small, if compared with the other, yet saith both Herodotus and Strabo, greater in beauty, and of no less cost, being all built of Touch-stones; difficult to be wrought, and brought from the farthest Aethiopian Mountains. But surely not so; yet intended they to have covered it with Theban Marble, whereof a great quantity lieth by it. Made it was by Mycerinus the son of Cheops, some say by a Curtizan of Nancretis, called Dorica by Sappho the Poetress, and beloved of her brother Caraxus, who sought with Wines, oft failed hither from Leibes. Others name Rhodope another of that Trade; at the first, fellow-slave with A'sop the writer of the Fables, who obtaining her liberty dwelt in this City, where rich in some sort were reputed noble. But that she should get by whoring such a mass of treasure, is incredible. Some tell a story, how that one day washing her self, an Eagle snatcht away her shoe, and bearing it to Memphis, let it fall from on high into the lap of the King. Who astonished with the accident, and admiring the form, forthwith made a search for the owner thereof throughout all his Kingdom. Found in Nancretis, and brought unto him, he made her his Queen, and after her death inclosed her in this Monument. She lived in the days of Amasis.

Not far off from these the Colossus doth stand, unto the mouth consisting of the natural Rock, as if for such a purpose advanced by Nature, the rest of huge flat stones laid thereon, wrought all together into the form of an Aethiopian woman, and adorned heretofore by the country people as a rural Deity. Under this, they say, lieth buried the body of Amasis. Of shape less monstrous than is Plinius report, who affirmeth the head to be an hundred and two feet in compass, when the whole is but sixty feet high. The face is something disfigured by time, or indignation of the *Moor*s detesting Images. The aforesaid Author (together with others) do call it a Sphinx. The upper part of a Sphinx resembled a Maid, and the lower a Lion; whereby the Egyptians deified the increase of the River, (and consequently of their riches) then rising when the Sun is in Leo and Virgo. This but from the shoulders upward surmounteth the ground, though Pliny give it a belly; which I know not how to reconcile unto the truth, unless the Sand do cover the remainder. By a Sphinx the Egyptians in their hieroglyphicks presented an Harlot; having an amiable, and alluring face, but withal the tyranny, and rapacity of a Lion, exercised over the poor heart-broken, and voluntarily perishing Lover. The Images of these they also erected before the entrances of their Temples, declaring that secrets of Philosophy, and sacred myteries.

myteries, should be folded in enigmatical expressions, separated from the understanding of the prophane multitude.

Five miles South-east of these, and two West of the River, towards which inclineth this brow of the Mountain, stood the Royal City of Memphis, the strength and glory of old Egypt; built by Ogdas, and called Memphis, by the name of his daughter, compressed (as they feign) by Nilus in the likeness of a Bull. In this was the Temple of Apis (which is the same with Osiris) as Osiris with Nilus, Bacchus, Apollo, &c. For under several names and figures they expressed the divers operations of one Deity, according to that of the Poet:

*Pluto, Persephone, Ceres, Venus, Love,
Tritons, Nereus, Thetis, Neptune, Jove,
Pan, Juno, Vulcan, be with th' awful rod,
Phaëbe, and archer Phaëbus; all one God.*

*Pluto, Persephone, Ceres, & Venus alma, & Amores, Tritones, Nereus, Thetis, Neptuneus & ipse
Mercurius, Juno, Vulcanus, Jupiter, & Pan,
Diana, & Phaëbus jactor sunt Deus unus.
Hemestianus.*

Here they kept their Apis, (whom also they adored) as containing the soul of Osiris. A black Bull with a white fore-head; and something differing in shape from the ordinary. By which marks they sought a successor, the old being dead, and mourned till they found him. Unto this adjoined the sumptuous Temple of Vulcan, who is said to have been King of Egypt, and the first that found out the commodity of fire.

*Egyptian Vulcan in the days of Noe,
(Call'd also Noe, Osiris, Dionysus.)
First found out fire, and arts that thence arise.*

*Vulcanus quidē Ægyptius temporibus Noe;
Qui Noe, & Dionysius & Osiris vocatur,
Invenit ignem, & artes ex igne quæ sunt.
Zecet.*

For in the winter season, drawing nigh a Tree set on fire by Lightning, and feeling the comfort of the heat, when almost extinct, he threw on more fuel, and so apprehending the nature and use did teach it unto others. Here also stood the Fane of Venus, and that of Serapis, beset with Sphinxes, adjoining to the Desert, a City great and populous, adorned with a world of Antiquities. But why spend I time about that that is not, the very ruins now almost ruined? yet some few impressions are left, and divers thrown down, Statues of monstrous resemblances, a scarce sufficient testimony to shew unto the curious seeker, that there it had been. Why then deplore we our humane frailty?

*When stones, as well as breath,
And names, do suffer death.*

*Mors etiam saxis, nominibusque venit.
Aust.*

This hath made some erroneously affirm old Memphis to have been the same with new Cairo, new in respect of the other. But those that have both seen and writ of the former, report it to have stood three Schoenes above the South angle of Delta, (each Schoene containing five miles at the least, and sometimes seven and a half, differing according to their several customs) which South angle is distant but barely four miles from Cairo. Besides the Pyramides appertaining unto Memphis, recorded by Marshall.

*Of her Pyramides let Memphis boast
No more the barbarous wonders of vain cost:*

*Barbara Pyramidum sileat miracula Memphis.
Speff.*

are affirmed to have stood five miles North-west of that City, standing directly West, and full twelve miles from Cairo. But the most pregnant proof hercof are the Mummies, (lying in a place where many generations have had their Sepulchres) not far above Memphis, near the brow of the Libyan Desert, and straightning of the Mountains, from Cairo well-nigh twenty miles. Nor like it is that they would so far carry their dead, having as convenient a place adjoining to the City.

These we had purposed to have seen; but the chargeable guard, and fear of the Arabs there then solemnizing their festival; being beside, to have lain out all night, made us content our selves with what we had heard, having before seen divers of the embalmed bodies, and some broken up to be bought for Dollars a piece at the City. In that place are some indifferent great, and a number of little Pyramides, with Tombs of several fashions: many ruined, as many violated by the

Moors,

Moors, and Arabians, who make a profit of the dead, and infringe the privilege of Sepulchres. There were the graves of the ancient Egyptians, from the first inhabiting of that Country: coveting to be there interred, as the place supposed to contain the body of Osiris. Under every one, or whereforever they found stones not natural to the place, by removing the same, descents are discovered like the narrow mouths of Wells, (having holes in each side of the walls to defend by, yet so troublesome, that many refuse to go down, that come thither of purpose) (some well-nigh ten fathoms deep, leading into long Vaults (belonging as should seem, to particular families) hewn out of the Rock, with pillars of the same. Between every Arch the Corpses lie rankt one by another, shrouded in a number of folds of Linen, swathed with bands of the same: the breasts of divers being stained with Hieroglyphical characters. Within their bellies are painted papers, and their Gods inclosed in little models of stone or metal: some of the shapes of Men, in Coat-armors, with the heads of Sheep, Hawks, Dogs, &c. others of Cats, Beetles, Monkeys, and such like. Of these I brought away divers with me, such in similitude.

A. This with the head of a Monkey or Baboon, should seem by what is said before, pag. 81. to have been worshipped by those of Thebais.
B. Anubis, whereof Virgil.
C. Thoth, whereof Virgil.

Omni-genique deum monstra, & larrator Anubis:
Contra Neptunum & Venerem, contraque Minervam,
Tela tenent: Æn. l. 8.

The monster-God, Anubis barking, buckle
With Neptunus, Venus, Pallas.

- Some say he was the eldest son of Osiris, being figured with the head of a Dog, in that he gave a Dog for his ensign. Others, that under this shape they adored Mercury, in regard of the sagacity of that creature. The Dog throughout Egypt was universally worshipped, but especially by the Cynopolites.
C. Those of Sait did principally worship the Sheep, it should seem, in this form.
D. This I conjecture (however unlike) hath the head of a Hawk, being generally worshipped by the Egyptians; see page 82. under which form they presented Osiris.
E. I know not what to make of it (for the original is greatly defaced.) unless it be a Lion, under which shape they adored Isis.
F. Not so much as the Beetle but received divine honors: and why? see Plutarch in Isis and Osiris, near the end.
G. The Cat all generally adored: they honouring such creatures, for that their vanquish and run-away Gods took on them such shapes to escape the fury of pursuing Typhons.

The Linen pulled off (in colour, and like in substance to the inward film between the bark and the bole; long dried and brittle) the body appeareth solid, uncorrupt and perfect in all his dimensions: whereof the mulcous parts are brown of colour, some black, hard as stone-pitch; and have in Physick an operation not unlike, though more sovereign. In the preparing of these, to keep them from putrefaction, they drew out the brains at the nostrils with an Instrument of Iron, replenishing the same with preservative spices. Then cutting up the belly with an Æthiopian stone, and extracting the bowels, they cleansed the inside with wine, and stuffing the same with a composition of Cassia, Myrrh, and other odours, closed it again. The like the poorer sort of people effected with Bitumen (as the inside of of their skulls and bellies yet testific) fetched from the Lake of Asphaltites in Jury. So did they with the juice of Cedars; which by the extream bitterness, and ficcative faculty, not only forthwith subdued the cause of interior corruption, but hath to this day (a continuance of above three thousand years) preserved them uncorrupted. Such is the differing nature of that Tree, procuring life as it were to the dead, and death to the living. This done, they wrapt the body with Linen in multitudes of folds, besmeared with Gum, in manner of Seal-cloth. Their Ceremonies (which were many) performed, they laid the Corps in a Boat, to be wafted over Acherusia, a Lake on the South of the City, by one only whom they called Charon: which gave to Orpheus the invention of his infernal Ferry-man: an ill-favoured slovenly Fellow, as should seem by Virgil:

Charon, grim Ferriman, these streams doth guard,
Ugly nasty: his huge boary beard
Knit up in cl's locks, staring fiery eye'd:
With robe on beastly shoulders hung, knot-ty'd.

Portitor has horrendus aquas & flumina cerar,
Terribili squalore Charon, cui plurima meato
Canities inculta jacet, flant lumina flamma,
Sordidus ex humeris nodo dependet amictus.
Æn. l. 6.

About this Lake stood the shady Temple of Hecate, with the Ports of Cocytus, an Oblivion, separated by Bars of Brass: the original of like Fables. When landed on the other side, the body was brought before certain Judges; to whom, if convicted of an evil life, they deprived it of burial; if otherwise, they suffered it to be interred as aforesaid. So sumptuous were they in their houses of death, so careful to preserve their Carcasses, for so much as the soul, knowing it self by divine instinct immortal, doth desire that the body (her beloved Companion) might enjoy (as far forth as may be) the like felicity: giving, by erecting such lofty Pyramids, and those dues of Funeral, all possible eternity. Neither was the loss of this less feared, than the obtaining coveted: inasmuch that the Kings of Egypt, accustomed to awe their Subjects (to them a most powerful curb, and a strong provokement) by threatening to deprive them of sepulture. The terror of this made Hellor to flee: the only fear and care of the dying Mexentius.

Not ill in death, not so came I to fight;
Nor made my Lausus such a march. One rite
Afford (if pity stoop to a vanquish'd foe)
Inter my Corps. Much hate of mine I know
In folds me. From their rage my body save:
And lay me with my Son, both in one grave.

Nullum in exade nefas, nec sic ad prelia veni,
Nec tecum meus hæc pepigit mihi fœdera Lausus.
Unum hoc pre, si qua est viciis venia hostibus oro;
Corpus humo patrare regi: scio acerba meorum
Circumstare odia; hunc oro defende furorom
Et me consortem nati concede sepulchro,
Virg. Æn. l. 10.

Returning by the way that we came, and having re-pass'd the Nilus, we inclined on the right hand to see the ruins of the old City adjoining to the South of Cairo, called formerly Babylon, of certain Babylonians there suffered to inhabit by the ancient Egyptian Kings, who built a Castle in the self same place where that now standeth, described before: which was long after the Garrison Town of one of the three Legions, set to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. It anciently gave the name of Babylon to this City below; now called Misraïmetick by the Arabians: said to have been built by Omar the successor unto Mahomet; but surely rather re-edified by him than founded; having had in it such store of Christian Churches, as is testified by their ruins. We pass'd by a mighty Cistern closed within a Tower, and standing upon an inlet of the River: built, as they here say, at the charge of the Jews, to appeale the anger of the King, incensed by them against the innocent Christians; who by the removing of a Mountain, (the task imposed upon their Faith) converted him unto their Religion, and his displeasure upon their Accusers. This serveth the Castle with water; running along an Aquaduct born upon 300 Arches. The ruins of the City are great; so were the Buildings: amongst which, many of Christian Monasteries and Temples; one lately (the last that stood) thrown down by this Bassa (as they say) for that it hindred his prospect; if so, he surely would not have given leave unto the Patriarch to re-build it: for which he was spitefully spoken of by the Moors, as a suspected favourer of the Christian Religion; who subverted forthwith what he had begun. Whereupon the worthy Cyril made a Voyage unto Constantinople, to procure the Grand Signiors Commandment for the support of his purpose: when by the Greeks there, not altogether with his will, he was chosen their Patriarch: but within a short space dispianted (as the manner is) by the bribery hierarchy of another, he returned unto Cairo. Besides here is a little Chappel dedicated to our Lady: underneath it a Grotto, in which it is said that she hid her self when pursued by Herod. Much frequented it is by the Christians, as is the Tomb of Nassifa (here being) by the Mahometans. She leaving Cufa a City of Arabia the Happy, here feared her self: and for that she was of the blood of their Prophet, and of little unprovable, after her death they canonized her for a Saint; and built over her body a sumptuous Sepulchre: unto which all strangers repaired, honouring it with their devotions, and enriching it with their gifts; amounting to an hundred thousand Shariffs one year with another: distributed amongst the poor Kindred of Mahomet; and amongst the Priests that had the charge of the Sepulchre; who by divulging forged miracles, increased the number of her Votaries. But Selymus subduing Egypt, the Tomb was defaced and ransacked by his Janizaries: who besides the Ornaments of Gold and Silver, took from thence in Shariffs above five millions. But the Christians say, that this Nassifa was an unsatiable Harlot; who out of colour (and that for Mahomet's sake) to convert the unnatural lusts of the people, did prostitute her self to all corners. The few Inhabitants that here be are Greeks and Armenians. Here we saw certain great Seraglio's, exceeding high, and propt up by buttresses. These they call the Granaries of Joseph: wherein he hoarded Corn in the years of plenty against the succeeding Famine. In all there be seven, three standing and employed to the very same use: the other ruined. From thence up the River for twenty miles space there is nothing but ruins. Thus with the day we ended our progress.

Upon the fourth of March we departed from Cairo, in the habit of Pilgrims; four of us English, comforted with three Italians: of whom one was a Priest, and another a Physician. For our selves we hired three Camels, with their Keepers; two to carry us, and the third for our provision. The prize we shall know at Gaza, upon the dividing of the great Caravan, answerable to the success of the Journey. We also hired a Copy for half a Dollar a day, to be our Interpreter, and to attend on us. Our provision for so long a Voyage we bore along with us, viz. Bisket, Rice, Raisins, Figs, Dates, Almonds, Olives, Oil, Sherberts, &c. buying Pewter, Brals, and such like implements, as if to set up House-keeping. Our Water we carried in Goat skins. We rid in shallow Cradles (which we bought also) two on a Camel: harboured above, and covered with Linnen: to us exceeding uneasy; not so to the people of these Countries, who sit cross-legg'd with a natural facility. That night we pitched by Hangia, some fourteen miles from the City. In the evening came the Captain: a Turk well mounted, and attended on. Here we stayed the next day following, for the gathering together of the Caravan; paying four Madeins a Camel unto them of the Village. Tucke (as those elsewhere) do nightly guard, as making good whatsoever is stolen. Ever and anon one crying Washed, is answered Elaugh by another (jointly signifying one only God:) which passing about the Caravan, doth assure them that all is in safety. Among us were divers Jewish Women in the extremity of their age undertaking to wear out a journey, only to dye at Jerusalem: bearing along with them the bones of their Parents, Husbands, Children, and Kinsfolk; as they do from all other parts where they can conveniently. The Merchants brought with them many Negroes; not the worst of their merchandizes. These they buy of their Parents, some thirty days journey above, and on the West side of the River. As the wealth of others consists in multitudes of Cattel; so theirs in the multitude of their Children: whom they part from with as little passion; never after to be seen or heard of: regarding more the price than the condition of their slavery, who are defended of Chus, Son of cursed Cham, as are all of that complexion. Not so by reason of their feed, nor heat of the Climate: the one confuted by Aristotle, the other by experience, in that Countries, as hot, produce of a different colour, and colder by thirty degrees have done of the same; (for Alexander in his Expedition into the East, encountered Black-men: and such was Memnon the Son of the Morning,

—Nigri non illa parentem
nonis in roseis sobria vidit equis.
Ovid. Am. l. c. El. 8.

Black Memnos Mother she ne're sober saw
When rose Steeds her day-bright Chariot drew.

so signified to be in that he reigned in the East; who came to the Wars of Troy from Susa a City of Persia;) Nor of the soil, as some have supposed; for neither haply will other faces in that soil prove Black, nor that race in other soils grow to better complexion: but rather from the curse of Noe upon Cham in the posterity of Chus: who inhabited a part of Mesopotamia, watered by Gihon a River of Paradise, and one of the the branches of Euphrates. Driven from thence, they planted themselves in Æthiopia, thereupon called also Chus. Perhaps the occasion of that error in the Translations of Genesis; which interpret Chus for Æthiopia, and Gihon for Nilus; distant above a thousand times from Eden. A circuit without question too spacious for a Garden.

About ten of the Clock in the night the Caravan dislodged: and at seven the next morning pitched at Bilbesb, which is in the land of Gishen. Paying two Madeins for a Camel, at midnight we departed from thence. Our Companions had their Cradles struck down through the negligence of the Camellers: which accident cast us behind the Caravan. In danger to have been surprized by the Persians, we were by a Spahie that followed, delivered from that mischief. About nine in the Forenoon we pitched by Catara: where we payed four Madeins for a Camel. Hereabout, but nearer the Nile, there is a certain tree called Alchan by the Arabs: the leaves thereof being dried, and reduced into powder, do dye reddish yellow. There is yearly spent of this thowrow the Turkish Empire, to the value of fourscore thousand Sultranies. The Women with it do dye their hair and nails: some of them their hands and feet; and not a few, the most of their bodies, tempered only with Gum, and laid on in the Bannia, that it may penetrate the deeper. The Christians of B-snia, Valachia, and Russia; do use it as well as the Mahometans. Trees also here be that do bring forth Cottous. The next morning before day we removed, and came by nine of the Clock to Salbia, where we overtook the rest of the Caravan: all Christians of those Countries riding upon Mules and Asses. They had procured leave to set forward a day before; desirous to arrive by Palm-Sunday at Jerusalem; (this Caravan staying ten days longer than accustomed, because of certain principal Merchants) but they durst not by themselves venture over the main Deserts: which all this while we had treated along, and now were to pass through.

A little beneath is the Lake Sirbonis, called by the old Egyptians, The place of Typhons expiration, now Bayrens, dividing Egypt from Syria. A place to such as knew it not, in those times full of unexpected danger. Then two hundred furlongs long being but narrow, and bordered on each side with Hills of Sand, which born into the water by the winds so thickened the fume, as not by the eye to be distinguished from a part of the Continent: by means whereof whole Armies have been deceived. For the sands near hand seeming firm, a good way entered (slid farther off, and lost no way of returning, but with a lingering cruelty swallowed the engaged: whereupon it was called Saratbrum. Now but a little Lake, and waxing less daily: the passage long since choaked up which it had into the Sea. Close to this standeth the Mountain Cassius, (no other than a huge mole of sand famous for the Temple of Jupiter, and Sepulchre of Pompey: there obscurely buried by the piety of a private Souldier: upon whom he is made by Lucan to bestow this Epitaph.

Great Pompey here doth lie, so Fortune pleas'd
To insile this Stone; whom Cæsars self would have Interr'd before he should have mist a Grave.
Hic situs est magnus, placet hoc fortuna sepulchrum
Dicere Pompei: quo condit maluit illum
Quam terra caruisse Socrer.

Who lost his head not far from thence by the treachery and commandment of the ungrateful Ptolomy. His Tomb was sumptuously re-edified by the Emperour Adrian. North hereof lies Idumea, between Arabia and the mid-land Sea, extending to Judea: called Edom in the Scriptures, of Esau; a name which was given him in regard of his colour, which signifieth Red in the Hebrew. Afterward called Idumea of the Idumeans: a people of Arabia the Happy: who in a mutiny quitting their Country: did plant themselves here incorporating with the Hebrews; of whom originally descended) and observing their Ceremonies, Idume rich in Palms.

—A arbusco Palmarum dives Idumes,
Lucan.

as heretofore with Balsamum, and indifferent fruitful towards the Sea. Difficult to be subdued, by reason of the bordering Deserts and penury of Waters, yet have they many Wells, but hid, and only known to the Inhabitants: who are now subject to the Turks; and differ in life and customs not much from the Arabians.

The Subassie of Salbia invited himself to our Tent; who teed on such provision as we had, would in conclusion have led upon us; had not our commandment (which stood us in four Shariffs) from the Bassa of Cairo, and the favour of the

the Captain by means of our Physician protected us; otherwise right or wrong had been but a silly plea to barbarous covetousness armed with power. We even were all the Franky that were in the company; we heard how he had served others, and rejoiced not a little in being thus fortified against him. The whole Caravan being now assembled, counsils of a thousand Horses, Mules, and Asses; and of five hundred Camels. These are the Ships of Arabia; their Seas are the deserts. A creature created for burthen. Six hundred weight is his ordinary load; yet will he carry a thousand. When in lading or unlading he lies on his belly; and will rise (as it is said) when laden proportionably to his strength, nor suffer more to be laid on him. Four days together he will travel without water; for a necessity fourteen; in his often belching thrusting up a Bladder, wherewith he moisteneth his mouth and throat. When they travel, they cram them with Barly dough. They are, as some say, the only that ingender backward. Their pace is slow, and intolerable hard, being without unshare of foot, were it never so little slippery or uneven. They are not made to amend their paces when weary. A Beast gentle and tractable, but in the time of his Ventry; then, as if remembering his former hard usage, he will bite his Keeper, throw him down, and kick him: forty days continuing in that fury, and then returning to his former meekness. About their necks they hang certain Charms included in Leather, and writ by their Dervises; to defend them from mischief, and the poison of ill eyes. Here we paid five Madeins for a Camel.

Having with two days rest refreshed them, now to begin the worst of their journey, on the tenth of March we entered the main Deserts: a part of Arabia Petrea; so called of Petra the principal City, now Rabalalab. On the North and West it borders on Syria and Egypt; Southwards on Arabia Felix, and the Red Sea; and on the East it hath Arabia the Desert. A barren and desolate Country, bearing neither Grass nor Trees, saving only here and there a few Palms, which will not forsake these forsaken places. That little that grows on the earth, is wild Hyssop, wherupon they do pasture their Camels, a Creature content with little, whose milk and flesh is their principal sustenance. They have no water that is sweet; all being a meer wilderness of sand: the winds having raised high mountains, which lie in drifts, according to the Quarters from whence they blow. About midnight (the Souldiers being in the head of the Caravan) these Arabi assailed our rear. The clamour was great; and the passengers, together with their Leaders, fled from their Camels. I and my Companion imagining the noise to be only an encouragement unto one another, were left alone; yet preserved from violence. They carried away with them divers Mules and Asses laden with Drugs, and abandoned by their Owners, not daring to stay too long, nor cumber themselves with too much luggage, for fear of the Souldiers. These are defended of Ishmael; called also Saracen of Sara, which signifieth a Desert, and saken, to inhabit. And not only of the place, but of the manner of their lives; for Sarak imports as much as a Thief: as now, being given from the beginning unto theft and rapine. They dwell in tents which they remove like walking Cities, for opportunity of prey, and benefit of pasturage. They acknowledge no Sovereign: nor worth the conquering, nor can they be conquered; retiring to places impassable for Armies, by reason of the rolling Sands, and penury of all things. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others: boasting of their Nobility, and at this day having all mechanical science. They hang about the skirts of the habitable Countries, and having robbed, retire with a marvellous celerity. Those that are not detected persons, frequent the neighbouring Villages for provision: and traffick without molestation; they not daring to intreat them evilly. They are of mean stature, raw-bone, tawny, having feminine voices: of a swift and noise-less pace; behind you, ere aware of them. Their Religion is Mahometanism; glorying in that the Impostor was their Country-man; their Language extending as far as that Religion extendeth. They ride on swift Horses (not misshapen) though lean, and patient of labour. They feed them twice a day with the milk of Camels; nor are they esteemed of, if not of sufficient speed to overtake an Ostridge. Of those there are store in the Deserts. They keep in flocks, and oft assault the Stranger Passenger with their fearful shriekes, appearing a far off like a Troop of Horsemen. Their bodies are too heavy to be supported with their Wings, which useless for flight, do serve them only to run the more speedily. They are the simplest of Fowls, and symbols of folly, what they find they swallow, though without delight, even Stones and Iron. When they have laid their Eggs, not less great than the Bullet of a Culverin (whereof there are great numbers to be sold in Cairo) they leave them, and unmindful where, sit on those they next meet with. The Arabi catch the young ones, running space as soon as disclosed; and when fated, do eat them: so do they some part of the old, and sell their skins with the feathers upon them. They ride also on Dromedaries; like in shape, but less than a Camel, of a jumping-gate, and incredible speed. They will carry a man (yet unfit for burthen) an hundred miles a day, living without water, and with little food satisfied. If one of these Arabians undertake your conduct, he will perform it faithfully: neither will any of the Nation molest you. They will lead you by unknown nearer ways; and farther in four days, than you can travel by Caravan in fourteen. Their Weapons are Bows, Darts, Slings, and long Javelings, headed like Partisans. As the Turk fit cross-leg'd, so do they on their heels: differing little in habit from the rustick Egyptians.

in

About break of day we pitched by two Wells of brackish water, called, The Wells of Duedar. Hither followed the Subisfe of Salbia, with the Jeni which we left behind: who would not travel the day before, in that it was their Sabbath. Their superstition had put them to much trouble and charges: as of late at Tunis it did to some pain. For a sort of them being to embark for Salonica; the wind coming fair on the Sunday, and the Master then hoisting Sails; loth to infringe their Law, and as loth to lose the benefit of that passage: to cozen their consciences, they hired certain Janizaries to force them aboard; who took their money, and made a jest of beating them in earnest. At three of the clock we departed from thence, and an hour before midnight pitched by the Castle of Catie, about which there is nothing vegetive, but a few solitary Palms. The water here is bad, inasmuch that that which the Captain drinks, is brought from Tina, a Sea-bordering Town, and twelve miles distant. Three-score Souldiers lie here in Garrison. We paid a piece of Gold for every Camel, and half a Dollar apiece for Horses, Mules, and Asses, and the Captain, besides five Madeins a Camel to the Arabi. It seemeth strange to me, how these Merchants can get by their Wares so far-fetched, and travelling thorough such a number of expences. The thirteenth spent in paying of Capbar, on the fourteenth of March by five of the clock we departed, and rested about noon by the Wells of Slaves. Hither followed the Governour of Catie, accompanied with twenty Horses, and pitched his Tent beside us. The reason why he came with so slight a conduct, thorough a passage so dangerous, (for there, not long before, a Caravan of three hundred Camels had been born away by the Arabi) was for that he was in fee with the chief of them: who upon the payment of a certain Tax, secured both Goods and Passengers. Of these there were divers in the Company. Before midnight we dislodged, and by six the next morning we pitched by another Well of brackish water, called, The Well of the Mother Affan. In the afternoon we departed. As we went, one would have thought the Sea to have been hard by, and to have removed upon his approaches, by reason of the glittering Nitre. And no doubt, but much of these Deserts have in times past been Sea; manifested by the saltness of the soil, and shells that lie on the sand in infinite numbers. The next morning by five of the clock we came to Arisfa; a Castle environed with a few houses, the Garrison consisting of a hundred Souldiers. This place is something better than desert; two miles removed from the Sea, and blest with good water. Here we paid two Madeins for a Camel, and half as much for our Asses; two of them for the most part rated unto one of the other. On the seventeenth of March we dislodged betimes in the morning, resting about noon by the Wells of Fear; the earth here looking green, yet waste and unhusbanded. In the evening we departed. Having passed in the night by the Castle Haniones, by break of day they followed us to gather their Capbar; being three Madeins upon every Camel. The Country from that place pleasant, and indifferent fruitful. By seven of the clock we pitched close under the City of Caza.

FINIS LIBRI SECUNDI.

L

THE

THE THIRD BOOK.

OW are we in the Holy Land, confined on the North with the Mountains of Libanus, and a part of Phœnicia: on the East it hath Cælosyria and Arabia Petraea: on the South the same together with Idumæa, the West is bounded, a part with Phœnicia, and the rest with the Mid-land Sea. Distant from the Line one and thirty degrees; extending unto thirty three; and something upward. So that in length from Dan (the same with Cæsarea Philippi) unto Eretsbebs (now Gibelin) it containeth not more than 140 miles: where broadest, not fifty. A Land that floweth with milk and honey: in the midst as it were, of the habitable World, and under a temperate Climate: adorned with beautiful Mountains and luxurious Vallies; the Rocks producing excellent waters, and no part empty of delight or profit. Having at once sustained of her own thirteen hundred thousand fighting men, (when then in all, proportioned with these) and that with abundance. Divided it was into three Regions: Judæa, which lieth to the South, Samaria in the midst, and Galilee, extending unto Libanus: of which the Upper and the Neather watered by many Springs and Torrents, but not many Rivers: Jordan the Prince of the rest; seeming to arise from Jor and Dan, two not far distant Fountains. But he fetched his birth from Phiala, a round deep Well an hundred and twenty furlongs off; and passing under the earth, ascendeth at the places aforesaid: running from North to South, not navigably deep, not above eight fathoms broad, nor (except by accident) heady: shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Alders, Tamarix, and Reeds of sundry kinds. Of some the Arabians make Darts and Javelins, of others Arrows of principal esteem; others they select to write with: more used than Quills by the people of these Countries. Passing along it maketh two Lakes: the one in the Upper Galilee, named Samachonitis (now Houle) in the Summer for the most part dry, over-grown with Shrubs and Reeds, which afford a shelter for Boars and Leopards: the other in the Inferiour, called the Sea of Galilee, the Lake of Genesareth, and of Tyberias, taking that name from a City so called, built there by Herod, in honour of Tyberius Cæsar, in length an hundred furlongs, and forty in breadth; the water exceeding sweet, and better to drink of than that of the River: abounding with sundry sorts of fishes, unto it peculiar. The soil about is of so admirable a nature, that fruits which are only proper to cold, to hot, and to temperate Countries, there jointly thrive with a like felicity: the Plains about are now well-nigh over-grown with bushes and unhusbanded. Running a great way farther, with many windings, as it were to delay his ill-felimity; gliding through the Plains of Jericho not far below where that City stood, it is at length devoured by that cursed Lake Asphaltides: to named of the Bitumen which it vomiteth. Called also the Dead Sea, perhaps in that it nourisheth no living Creature; or for his heavy waters, hardly to be moved by the winds. So extreme salt, that whatsoever is thrown thereinto not easily sinketh. Vellusian for a tryal, caused divers to be cast in, bound hand and foot, who floated, as if supported by some Spirit. They say that birds flying over, fall in, as if enchanted. Nor unlikely, since other Lakes, as that of Avernus, have effected the like.

—A name of right

*Impos'd, in that to all birds opposit,
Which when those airy swift passengers o're-fly,
Forgetful of their wings they fall from high
With out-stretcht necks on earth, where earth partakes
That killing property; where Lakes, on Lakes:*

—Nomen id ab re

*Impositum est, quia sunt avibus contraria cunctis:
E regione ea, quod loca cum adveniente volantes
Remigii oblitæ pennarum vela remittunt
Præcipitesque cadunt molli cervicæ proflua
In terram, si forte ita fert natura locorum:
Aut in aquam, si forte lacus substratus Averno est.*
Lucr. l. 6.

suffocated with the poyson of the ascending vapours. The whole Country have from hence their provision of Salt. Seventy miles it is in length, and sixteen over; having no egress unless under the earth, nor yet increasing with the accels of the River, and those multitude of Torrents. Once a fruitful Valley, compared for delight unto Paradise; and called Pentapolis, of her five Cities: destroyed with fire from Heaven, and converted then into this filthy Lake, and barren desolation that environs it. A fearful Monument of Divine vengeance. Josephus (and he that Country-man) reports, that about it are fruits, and flowers, most delectable to the eye, which touched, fall into ashes. An Historian perhaps not always to be credited. Yet nor far off there grows a fruit like a green Walnut. This I have seen, which they say never ripeneth. At the foot of the bordering Mountains, there are certain black stones, which burn like coals (whereof the Pilgrims make fires) yet diminish not therewith, but only become lighter and whiter. Beyond Jordan are the warm Baths of Callirhoe, which discharge themselves into this Lake: exceeding sovereign for sundry diseases.

This famous Country, the Stage of Wonders,

Loved of God; planted by first Colonies:

*Nurse of blest Saisus, and Kingly Families;
Fruitful in Worthies; glorious in the birth
Of Christ: who here descending from the skies
Did with his Blood purge the polluted earth.*

—Cæra Deo, primis habitata colonis,
Terra domus regum, sedes clarissimæ divum:
Nobilium antiquæ feræ secunda virorum
—Natalis solum, quo lapsus ab æstris
Deterit Christum mortales sanguine culpa.

was first inhabited by Canaan the Son of Cham, and called by his name: he dying, left it to his eleven Sons, the Authors of as many Nations. Abraham the tenth from Noe, the sixth from Heber (of whom the Hebrews, retaining in the confusion of Tongues their primitive Language) * departing from Chaldea by divine appointment dwelt in this Country, promised him by God in a vision: and thereupon called, The Land of Promise: as of Jacob, Israel, so named for struggling with the Angel. His posterity two hundred and eighteen years after descending into Egypt, were there for two hundred and seventeen years retained in bondage. Brought from thence by Moses; forty years after, under the conduct of Josua they entered Canaan, expelled the Canaanites, and unto every Tribe they allotted a portion. At the first for three hundred and eighty six years they were governed by Captains and Judges: after that for four hundred and eighteen, by Kings; Juda the Scepter-bearer; the Regal City Jerusalem. From Rehoboam ten Tribes revolted, who chose the fugitive Jeroboam for their King: his Successors filed Kings of Israel; the last of that Kingdom Samaria. Two hundred fifty and nine years that Kingdom had endured; when in the ninth year of the Reign of Hoshea they were led into Captivity by the King of Assyria: and planted, as some say, beyond the Caspian Mountains; from whence they never returned. The Assyrians posselt of their Land, were from thenceforth called Samaritans: who devoured by Lions for sacrificing to the Gods of their Country, revoked certain of the Israelitish Priests, to instruct them in their Law and Religion; but no otherwise observed, then as leaving it free to worship what God each man best liked. To Juda only continued Benjamin with the best of the Levites. Off oppressed by Tyrants, as oft wonderfully delivered; at length in the Reign of Zedechias they were carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar into Babylon; Fifty nine years after set at liberty by Cyrus, with gifts and immunities they returned under the conduct of Zerubbabel. After this they were called Jews of Juda, the Patriarch, and of the Country Jury. From which time until the Maccabees, a tract of three hundred sixty and four years, they were governed by an Aristocracy: tried with many calamities, and subject to the infolencies of over-powerful neighbours. Of whom Antiochus Epiphanes, who, assisted by the fæitious, massacred the people, not sparing the Conspirators: interdicting, and by torture enforcing whatsoever by their Law they were Irreconcilable are the computations of Chronologia, I follow Christi, Helvicus, the last and reputed best. * A. M. 20. 23.

How this may be reconciled to these 70- Jer. 25. Dan 9 Jer. Helvicus.

commanded or prohibited. The Samaritans would be no more of kin to the Jews, but professed themselves to be defended of the Sidonians, and re-dedicated their Temple (before dedicated to God) on Mount Garazin unto Jupiter. To oppose this temple, up stood Matthias, a Priest of the race of Amones, with his five sons; all men of incomparable valour. Of whom Judas Machabeus did (if not restore) uphold their State from a further declination. Judas slain, Johor succeeded him; Jonathan, Johab, and Simon, Jonathan, the last of the Brethren, (for Eleeazar was slain before) by the fall of the Elephant which he flew, supplanting it to have born the person of Antiochus:) all dying nobly in their Countries defence; a glorious and to be emulated Delivry. After Simon, Hircanus his son obtained the Priesthood, together with the Principality. A man more fortunate than the rest: who not only defended his own, but made many prosperous invasions. Antiochus his son translated the Principality into a Kingdom: the first that wore a Crown: in worth degenerating; flattered with the blood of his Mother and Brother. His Brother Alexander reigned in his stead; not intemperate in cruelty, ever in Wars, either foreign or civil; acquainted with variable fortunes. He left his Kingdom to Alexandra his Wife, for restraint of his cruelty, well beloved of the people. By him he had two Sons, Hircanus and Antiochus, concurring upon the eldest the Priesthood and Kingdom. Out of their overmuch zeal mislived by the Pharisees, the offended incense Antiochus (a man of an aspiring spirit, and viciously daring) who upon the sickness and death of his Mother affected the Kingdom. Hircanus resigns: Antipater the Idumean procurer him to revoke his resignation: who after many bickerings, is at length restored by Pompey, who conquereth Judea, and leadeth Antiochus to Rome, with his Children, Scarus here governing for the Romans. Alexander, his eldest Son, getteth loofe, pursueth Hircanus, is suppressed by Gabinus, who succeeded Scarus in the Government of Syria, and restored Hircanus to the Priesthood, alters the Government, divides Judea into five Provinces, and commits them to several Governours. Antiochus escapeeth from Rome, attempteth the Kingdom: is overthrowen, taken, and sent back again. Cassius succeeds Gabinus, by him Cassius. Antiochus set free by Cesar, and furnished with an Army, is poysoned by Pompey's Favourites: his Son Alexander beheaded before by Scipio at Antioch. Antipater for his manifold defects is by Cesar made Governour of Judea, and the Priesthood for his sake confirmed to Hircanus, who unit for rule, enjoying only the Title of a King, is directed by the other. Antipater soon after poysoned (a man of high valour and wisdom) leaveth four Sons behind him, Phascolus, Jeseph, Herod, and Pharorus. Herod by his Victories becometh famous: who with his Brother Phascolus, are made Tetrarchs by Anthony. Antigonus the second Son to Antiochus, contrary to promise, are treacherously surpris'd, and delivered to Antigonus; who making Hircanus, by biting off his ears, incapable of the Priesthood, assumeth unto himself the Sovereignty. Herod in distress repaireth to Rome, assisted, and created King of Judea by Augustus and Anthony. The Wars after many conficts, do end with the death of Antigonus: the last of the Race of the Macabees, who held that Government one hundred thirty and one years. Herod reigned thirty four years; a man full of admirable virtues, and execrable vices; his acts had deservedly given him the addition of Great: fortunate abroad, unfortunate in his Family; having put three of his Sons to death, and the Wife that he loved: his life tragical, his death desperate. His Crown he bequeathed to Archelaus, his Son by Milbae the Samaritan. But expelled by the Jews for his cruelty, the matter was debated before Augustus, who gave him half of the Kingdom with the Title of an Ethnarch. The other half divided into two Tetrarchies, were bestowed on two of his Brethren, Philip (to whom Agrippa succeeded, the Son of Antiochus, slain by his Father Herod, with the title of a King, given him by Claudius Cesar) and Antipa, called also Herod. Archelaus banished soon after for his cruelty, did die in exile. His Ethnarchy reduced into a Roman Province, and the Government thereof committed unto Pompius Pilate by Tiberius Cesar, under whom the Son of God did die for the offences of man, tormented by Heathen Oracles.

Sed manibus passis cum mensus cuncta coronam
De spini cul erit, necnon latus ejus arundo
Fixerit ulla manu, cujus causa tribus horis
Nox tenebrosa die medio monstrofaque fiet :

But when with hands out stretcht, & head thorn bound,
A curst spear his blessed side shall wound:
For which abortive night for three hours space
Shall mid-day mask: To mans affrighted race,

*The Temple then shall yield a dire ostent :
He shall to profound Hell make his descent,
And shew the dead a way to life——*

His name thus covertly expressed,

Explained by the numerical Greek Letters,

ΙΗΣΟΥΣ
10 8.200,70.
400.200.
8.8.800.

Petronius succeeded Pilate, Felix Petronius, and then Festus, Albinius, and Florus. Florus's cruelty and bad government provoked the Jews to rebellion. But the calamities of that War inflicted by Gallus, Vespasian, and Titus, exceed both example and description. His blood be upon us and ours: a wish then granted, was now effected with all kindness of terror. Judea deprived of her fertility, together with her Cities and people, is governed by Lucius Bassus, who by Vespasian's appointment made sale of the Land, and on every head imposed an annual Tribute. So continued it until the Reign of Adrian: when the Jews impatient, that foreigners should possess their Country, raised a new commotion, to whom the dispersed resorted from all parts, Barabab the Ring-leader their counterfeit Messias. And because his name doth signify the Son of a Star, he applied unto himself that Prophecy: Out of Jacob shall a star arise. But when slain, and discovered for an Impostor, they called him Bencaoban, which is, Son of Lying. Julius Severus Lieutenant unto Adrian, (notwithstanding many of their desperate attempts) razed fifty of their strong Holds, nine hundred eighty five Towns, and slew of them five hundred and fourscore thousand. Inasmuch that the Country lay waste, and the ruined Cities became an habitation for Foxes and Leopards. The Captives by the Emperours commandment were transported into Spain, and from thence again exiled in the year 1500. by Ferdinand and Emmanuel. Jury now without Jews, embraced the Christian Religion in the days of Constantine, whose Mother Helena is said to have built therein no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places made famous by the Miracles of Christ; or such as were the known habitations of His Disciples. The next change befell in the Reign of Phocas, when the Persian over-ran all Palestine, inflicting unheard of tortures on the patient Christians. No sooner freed from that yoke, but made to sustain a greater by the execrable Saraceni, under the conduct of Omar, Successor unto Mahomet; who were long after expelled by the Turks, for they newly planted in Perfia by Tangrolipsis. When the Christians of the West, for the recovery of the Holy Land (so by them titled) set forth an Army of three hundred thousand, Godfrey of Bullain the General, who made thereof an absolute Conquest, and was elected King of Jersusalem. Less than a year gave a period to his Reign. Him his Brother Baldwin succeeded, then Baldwin the second his Kinsman, him, Fulk his Son-in-law. Fulk left two Sons behind him; Baldwin the third, and Ammeric, who succeeded his Brother; him, his Son Baldwin the fourth. Then Baldwin the fifth, his Sisters Son: a Child by his Mother poisoned within seven months of his Coronation, out of her cruel ambition to gain unto her self the Sovereignty, by conferring the same upon her Husband Guy, the ninth and last King of Jersusalem. Their troublesome Reigns, high Valours, the alternate changes of Foils and Victories (their Foes at hand, their succours afar off) and finally, their final overthrow procured by home-bred Treason, require a peculiar History. In the 89. year of that Kingdom, and during the Reign of Guy, the Christians were utterly dispossest of Judea, by Saladin the Egyptian Sultan. A Country it seemeth anathematized for the death of Christ, and slaughter of so many Saints, as may be conceived by view of the place it self, and ill success of the Christian Armies: which in attempting to recover it, have endured there to often such fatal overthrows; or else, in repeating it a meritorious War, they have provoked the Divine vengeance. The airy Title our Richard the First did purchase of Guy, with the real and flourishing Kingdom of Cyprus, which now is assumed by the Kings of Spain, with as little profit, and the like ambition. But the possession remained with the Egyptians: until Selmyr, by extinguishing of the Mameluck did join the same to the Ottoman Empire. So it remaineth at this day; and now is governed by several Sarazicks, being under the Bassa of Damisco.

—vocales quatuor autem
Fert, non vocalesque duas, binum geniorum :
Sed quæ sit numeri totius summa docebo.
Namque octo monadas, totidem decadas super ista
Atque hecatontadas octo, infidis significabat
Humanis nomen. Sibv Oras. l. x

It is for the most part now inhabited by Moors and Arabians: those possessing the Vallies, and these the Mountains. Turks there be few: but many Greeks, with other Christians, of all Sects and Nations, such as impure to the place an adherent Holiness. Here be also some Jews, yet inherit they no part of the Land, but in their own Country do live as Aliens. A people scattered throughout the whole World, and hated by those amongst whom they live, yet suffered as a necessary mischief: subject to all wrongs and contumelies, which they support with an invincible patience. Many of them have I seen abused, some of them beaten; yet never saw I Jew with an angry countenance. They can subject themselves unto times, and to whatsoever may advance their profit. In general, they are worldly wise, and thrive whereforever they set footing. The Turk employs them in the receipt of Customs, which they by their policies have increased, and in buying and selling with the Christian, being himself in that kind a Fool, and easily couzened. They are men of indifferent stature, and the best complexions. These as well in Christendom, as in Turkie, are the remains only of the Tribes of Juda and Benjamin, with some Levites which returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. Some say, that the other ten are utterly lost: but they themselves that they are in India, a mighty Nation, incompassible with Rivers of stone, which only cease to run on their Sabbath, when prohibited to travel. From whence they expect their Messias: who with fire and sword shall subdue the World, and restore their temporal Kingdom; and therefore whatsoever befalls them, they record it in their Annals. Amongst them there are three Sects. One only allow of the Books of Moses. These be Samaritan Jews, (not Jews by descent, as before said) that dwell in Damascus: who yearly repair to Sichem (now Neapolis) and there do at this day worship a Calve, as I was informed by a Merchant dwelling in that Country. Another allow of all the Books of the Old Testament. The third sort mingle the same with Traditions and fantastical Fables devised by their Rabbins, and inserted in their Talmud. Throughout the Turky Dominions they are allowed their Synagogues; so are they at Rome, and elsewhere in Italy, whose receipt they justify as a retained Testimony of the verity of Scriptures, and as being a means of their more speedy Conversions: whereas the offence that they receive from Images, and the loss of goods upon their Conversions, oppugn all persuasions whatsoever. Their Synagogues (for as many as I have seen) are neither fair without, nor adorned within; more than with a Curtain at the upper end, and certain Lamps (so far as I could perceive) not lighted by day-light. In the midst stands a Scaffold, like those belonging to Quenisters, in some of our Cathedral Churches, where he stands that reads their Law, and sings their Liturgy: an Office not belonging unto any in particular, but unto him (so he be free from deformities) that shall at that time purchase it with most money, which redounds to their publick Treasury. They read in savage Tones, and sing in Tunes that have no affinity with Musick, joyning voices at the several closes. But their fantastical gestures exceed all Barbarism; continually weaving with their bodies, and often jumping upright (as is the manner in Dances) by them esteemed an action of Zeal, and figure of spiritual elevation. They pray silently, with ridiculous and continual noddings of their heads, not to be seen and not laugh at. During the time of Service, their heads are veiled in Linen, fringed with knots, in number answerable to the number of their Laws, which they carry about with them in Procession, and rather boast of than observe. They have it stuck in the Jaums of their doors, and covered with glass, written by their Cacans, and signed with the Name of God, which they kiss next their hearts in their goings forth, and in their returns. They may print it, but it is to be written on Parchment, prepared of purpose (the Ink of a prescribed composition) not with a Quill, but a Cane. They do great reverence to all the Names of God, but especially to Jehovah, inasmuch that they never use it in their speech. And whereas they handle with great respect the other Books of the Old Testament, the Book of Ezra (that part that is Canonical, for the other they allow not of) writ in a long scroll, they let fall on the ground as they read it, because the Name of God is not once mentioned therein, which they attribute to the wisdom of the Writer, in that it might be perused by the Heathen. Their other Books are in the Spanish Tongue and Hebrew Character. They confess our Saviour to have been the most learned of their Nation, and have this Fable dispersed amongst them concerning him; How that yet a Boy, attending upon a great Cacan, at such a time as the Heavens accustomed to open, and whatsoever he prayed for was granted, the Cacan oppressed

Deeds of their Law.

oppressed with sleep, charged the Boy, when the time was come, to awaken him. But he provoked with a frantick desire of peculiar glory (such is their devilish invention) made for himself this ambitious request; that like a God he might be adored amongst men. Which the Cacan over-hearing, added thereunto (since what was craved could not be provoked) that it might not be till after his death. Whereupon he lived contemptibly, but dead, was, is, and shall be honoured unto all posterity. They say withal, that he got into the Sacrum Sanclorum, and taking from thence the powerful names of God, did sew them in his Thigh. By virtue whereof he went invisible, rid on the Sun-beams, raised the dead to life, and effected like Wonders. That being often amongst them, they could never lay hands on him, until he voluntarily tendered himself to their fury, not willing to defer his future glory any longer. That being dead, they buried him privately in a Dughill, lest his body should have been found, and worshipped by his followers: when a Woman of great Nobility, seduced by his doctrine, so prevailed with the Roman Governour, that he threatened to put them forthwith to the sword, unless they produced the body. Which they digging up, found uncorrupted, and retaining that self-same amiable favour, which he had when he lived, only the hair was fallen from his crown: imitated, as they say, by the Romish Fryars. Such, and more horrible blasphemies invent they, which I fear to utter. But they be generally notorious lyes. Although they agree with the Turk in Circumcision, detestation of Images, abstinence from Swines flesh, and divers other Ceremonies; nevertheless the Turks will not suffer a Jew to turn Mahometan, unless he first turn a kind of Christian. As in Religion they differ from others, so they do in habit, in Christendom enforcedly, here in Turkie voluntarily. Their under-garments differing little from the Turky in fashion, are of Purple cloth; over that they wear Gowns of the same colour, with large wide sleeves, and clasped beneath the chin, without band or collar, on their heads high brimless Caps of Purple, which they move at no time in their salutations. They shave their heads all over, not in imitation of the Turk: it being their ancient fashion, before the other was a Nation, as appeareth by Cerillus (together with their Language and Bonnets then used) relating of the sundry people which followed Xerxes in his Grecian Expedition.

These wars a people rarely featu'd, follow;
Who unknown, the Phœnician language speak.
On hills of Solyman by a vast lake
Have they their seat. Their heads they shave and guard
Exuvias capitis duras igne gerant.
With Helms of horse-skin in the fire made hard.

Hujus miranda specie gens castra secuta
Phœnissim ignota linguam mitebat are,
Sedes hinc Solymani montes stagnum prope, vastum,
Tome caput circum; squallenti vertice equino
Exuvias capitis duras igne gerant.

Their familiar speech is Spanish: yet few of them are ignorant in the Hebrew, Turkish, Moresco, vulgar Greek and Italian Languages. Their only Studies are Divinity and Physick: their occupations Brokage and Usury; yet take they no Interest of one ano her, nor lend but upon Pawns, which once forfeited, are un-redeemable. The poorer sort have been noted for Fortune-tellers, and by that deceit to have purchased their subsistence.

What dream siever you will buy
The Jews will sell you readily.

Qualicumque Judæi fœmina vendunt;
Jæven. Sat.

They marry their Daughters at the age of twelve: not affecting the single life, as repugnant to Society and the Law of Creation. The Sabbath (their devoutness ended) they chiefly employ in nuptial benevolences, as an act of charity befitting well the sanctity of that day. Although no City is without them throughout the Grand Signiors Dominions; yet live they with the greatest liberty in Salonica, which is almost altogether inhabited by them. Every male above a certain age, doth pay for his head an annual Tribute. Although they be governed by the Turkish Justice; nevertheless, if a Jew deserve to dye by their Law, they will either privately make him away, or falsely accuse him of a crime that is answerable to the fact in quality, and deserving like punishment. It is no ill turn for the Franks, that they will not feed at their Tables. For they eat no flesh, but of their own killing; in regard of the entrails, which being dilocated or corrupted, is an abomination unto them. When so it falls out, though exceeding good (for they kill of the best) they will tell it for a trifle. And as for their Wines, being for the most part planted and gathered gathered by Grecians, they dare not drink of them for fear they be baptized; a Ceremony wherof we have spoken already. They sit at their meat as the Turks do. They bury in the fields by themselves, having only a stone set upright on their graves, which once a year they frequent, burning of incense, and tearing of their garments, for certain days they fast and mourn for the dead, yea, even for such as have been executed for offences. As did the whole Nation at our being at Constantinople, for two of good account that were impaled upon stakes, being taken with a Turkish Woman, and that on their Sabbath. It was credibly reported, that a Jew, not long before, did poyson his son whom he knew to be unrefrainably lascivious, to prevent the ignominy of a publick punishment, or loss by a chargeable redemption. The flesh consumed, they dig up the bones of those that are of their Families; wherof whole Bark-fulls not seldom arrive at Toppa, to be conveyed, and again interred at Jerusalem, imagining that it doth add delight unto the souls that did owe them, and that they shall have a quicker dispatch in the general Judgment. To speak a word or two of their Women: The elder mabble their heads in linen, with the knots hanging down behind. Others wear high Caps of plate, wherof some I have seen of beaten gold. They wear long quilted Waile-coats, with Breeches underneath; in Winter of Cloth, in Summer of Linen, and over all when they stir abroad, Loose-gowns of Purple, flowing from the shoulders. They are generally fat, and rank of the favours which attend upon fluttish corpulency. For the most part they are goggle-ey'd. They neither shun conversation, nor are too watchfully guarded by their Husbands. They are good Work-women, and can and will do any thing for profit, that is to be done by the Art of a Woman, and which suits with the fashion of these Countries. Upon injuries received, or violence done to any of their Nation, they will cry out mainly at their Windows, beating their cheeks, and tearing of their garments. Of late they have been blest with another Hester; who by her favour with the Sultan, prevented their intended Massacre, and turned his fury upon their accusers. They are so well skilled in lamentations, that the Greeks do hire them to cry at their Funerals.

— plorat
Uberibus semper lacrymis, temperaque paratis
In sitientis sui, acque expectantibus illam
Quo jubeat manare modo—
Juv. Sat. 6.

Fruitful in tears: tears that still ready stand
To fall forth, and but expect command.

But now return we unto Gaza, one of the five Cities, and that the principal that belonged to the Philistines, (called Philistins in the Scriptures) a warlike and powerful people, of whom afterwards the whole Land of Promise took the name of Philistine. Gaza or Aza signifieth Strong. In the Persian Language a Treasury: so said to be called by Cambyses, who invading Egypt, sent thither the Riches purchased in that War. It was called Constantia by the Emperour Constantine, Gaza again by Julian, and now Gazra. First, famous for the acts of Samson, who lived in the time of the Trojan Wars: (an Age that produced Worthies) whose force and fortunes, are said to have given to the Poets their inventions of Heracles, who lived not long before him. And afterward famous for the two wounds there received by Alexander the Great, then counted the principal City of Syria. It stands upon a Hill, environed with Vallies, and those again well-nigh clothed with Hills; most of them planted with all sorts of delicate fruits. The building mean, both for form and matter. The best but low, of rough stone, arched within, and flat on the top, including a Quadrangle: the Walls surmounting their Roofs, wrought thorow with Pot-herds, to catch and strike down the refreshing winds; having Spouts of the same, in colour, shape, and site, resembling great Ordnance. Others are covered with Mats and Hurdles; some built of Mud; amongst all, not any comely or convenient. Yet there are some reliques left, and some impressions that testify a better condition. For divers simple Roofs are supported with goodly Pillars of Purpura Marble; some plain, some curiously carved. A number broken in pieces, do serve for Thresholds, Jaums of doors, and sides of Windows, almost unto every beggarly Cottage. On the North-East corner, and summit of the Hill, are the ruins of huge Arches sunk low in the earth, and other foundations of a stately Building. From whence the late Sauziack conveyed Marble Pillars of an incredible bigness, enforced to saw them asunder ere they could be removed, which he employed in adorning a certain Mosque below in the Valley. The Jews do fable this place to have been the Theatre of Samson, pulled down on the head of the Philistines. Perhaps some Palace there built by Protemy or Pompey, who re-edified the City: or Christian Asian Temple erected by Constantine, or else that Castle founded by Baldwin the third, in the year 1148. The Castle now being, not worthy that name, is of no importance: wherein lyeth the Sauziack (by some termed a Bassa) a sickly young man, and of no experience, who governs his Province by the advice of a More. His Territories begin at Arissa, on the West-side of the City, out of sight, and yet within hearing, is the Sea, seven furlongs off; where they have a decayed and unsafe Port, of small avail at this day to the Inhabitants. In the Valley on the East-side of the City, are many straggling Buildings, beyond which there is a Hill more eminent than the rest, on the North-side of the way that leadeth to Babylon, said to be that (and no question the same described in Scriptures) to which Samson carried the Gates of the City, upon whose top there standeth a Mosque, environed with the Graves and Sepulchres of Mahometans. In the Plain between that and the Town, there stand two high Pillars of Marble, their tops much worn by the weather; the cause of their erecting unknown, but of great antiquity. South of this, and by the way of Egypt, there is a mighty Cistern, filled only with the fall of rain, and defended into by large stairs of stone, where they wash their Cloaths, and water their Cattel.

The same day that we came, we left the Caravan, and lodged in the City under an Arch in a little Court, together with our Asses. The door exceeding low, as are all that belong unto Christians, to withstand the sudden entrance of the insolent Turks. For they here do live in a subjection to be pished, not so much as daring to have handiwork houses, or to employ their grounds to the most benefit. So dangerous it is to be esteemed wealthy. During our abode here, there came a Captain with two hundred Sappeis, sent by Murat Bassa, to raise thirty thousand Dollars of the poor and few Inhabitants of this City. The Grecians have certain small Vineyards, but that they have Wine they dare not be known, which they secretly press in their houses. They bury their Corn under ground, and keep what they are to spend, in long Vessels of Clay, in that it is subject to be eaten with worms (as throughout Egypt) and will not last, if not so preserved. In the principal part of the City, they have an ancient Church, frequented also by the Copties. The Greekish Women (a thing elsewhere unseen) here cover their faces, dying their hands black, and are apparelled like the Moors of Cairo. Every Saturday in this Church-yard, upon the graves of the dead, they keep a miserable howling, crying of custom, without tears or sorrow. The Sabbassee would have extorted from us well-nigh as much money as we are masters of; which we had hardly avoided, had not the sick Sauziack (in that administered unto by our Physician) quitted us of all payments. So that there is no travelling this way for a Frank, without special favour.

Thrust out of our Lodging (as we were about to leave it) by the uncivil Sappeis, who seized on divers of our necessities; on the nineteenth of March we returned to the Caravan. We paid half a Dollar apiece to the place for our Camels; and for their hire from Cairo, for those of burthen six Sultanies; for such as carried Passengers eight. We gave them two Sultanies more apiece to proceed unto Jerusalem. Here the Caravan divided, not a small part thereof taking the way that leadeth unto Babylon. The next day we also dislodged, leaving the Jews behind us, who were there to celebrate their Festival. The Captain of the Caravan departed the night before, taking his way through the mountainous Country by Hebron, out of his devotion to visit the Graves of the Patriarchs; a place of high esteem amongst them, and much frequented in their Pilgrimages. The ancient City (the seat of David before he took Sion from the Jebusites) is utterly ruined. Hard by there is a little Village, seated in the field of Machpelah, where standeth a goodly Temple, erected over the Cave of their Burial, by Helena the Mother of Constantine, converted now into a Mosque. We past this day through the most pregnant and pleasant Valley that ever eye beheld; On the right hand a ridge of high Mountains, (whereon stands Hebron;) on the left hand the Mediterranean Sea, bordered with continued Hills, beset with variety of fruits, as they are for the most part of this days Journey. The Champion between about twenty miles over; full of flowry Hills ascending leisurely, and not much surmounting their rank Vallies; with Groves of Olives, and other fruits dispersedly adorned. Yet is this wealthy bottom (as are all the rest) for the most part un-inhabited, but only for a few small and contemptible Villages, possessed by barbarous Moors, who till no more than will serve to feed them; the grass waste-high, unmowed, uncut, and uselessly withering. Perhaps so desolate, in that insisted by the often recourse of Armies, or masterful Sappeis, who before they go into the field (which is seldom until the latter latter end of harvest, left they should starve themselves by destroying of the Corn, are billited in these rich Pastures, for the benefit of their Horses, lying in Tents besides them, committing many outrages on the adjoining Towns and distressed Passengers.

Ten miles from Gaza, and near unto the Sea, stands Ascalon, now a place of no note: more than that the Turk doth keep there a Garrison. Venerable heretofore amongst those Heathen, for the Temple of Dagon, and Birth of Semiramis, begotten of their Goddess Decretia. Who inflamed with the love of a certain Youth that sacrificed unto her, and having by him a Daughter; ashamed of her incontinency, did put him away, exposed the Child to the Deserts, and confounded with sorrow, threw her self into a Lake replenished with fish, adjoining to the City, and is feigned to have been converted into one of them.

—Narres
Decreti, quam veris quavis velantibus artus
Stagna Palæstini credunt coluisse figura.
Ovid. Met. l. 6.

—Or of Decretia tell,
That did (in Palæstine believe) forsake
Her form: and cloath'd with scales liv'd in a lake.

Whereupon the Syrians obtained from the fish thereof, as reputed Deities. This Decretia is said to be that Dagon the Idol of the Atkalonites, (but with what congruity I know not) mentioned in the Scripture, which signifieth the fish of sorrow: who had her Temple close by that Lake, with her image in the figure of a fish, all excepting the face, which resembled a Woman. But the Infant nourished by Doves, which brought her Milk from the Pails of the Pastors, after became the Wife of Ninus, and Queen of Assyria; whereupon she was called Semiramis, which signifieth a Dove in the Syrian Tongue. Now when she could no longer detain the Empire from her Son, not enduring to survive her glory, the vanisht out of sight; and was said by them to have been translated to the Gods, according to the answer of the Oracle. Others feign with like truth, that she was turned into a Dove;

—Ut sumptis illius filia pennis
Extremos alis in turribus egere annos.
Ovid. Met. l. 6.

Who with assumed wings made her ascent
To high tops Towers, and there her old age spent.

in memorial whereof the Babylonians did bear a Dove in their Ensigns: confirmed by the Prophecy of Jeremiah, who foretelling of the desolation of Judea, adviseth them to flye from the Sword of the Dove. Ten miles North of Ascalon along the shore stands Azotus: and eight miles beyond that Acharon, now places of no reckoning.

About two of the clock we pitched by Cane Sedoe; a ruinous thing, hard by a small Village, and not a quarter of a mile from the Sea, the Caravan lying in deep Pastures without controulment of the Villages. The next day we departed two hours before Sun-rise; descending into an ample Valley, and from that into another, having divers Orchards towards the Sea. The Country such (but that without Trees) as we pass thorow before: no part so barren, but would prove most profitable, if planted with Vines and Fruits, made more than probable by those that grow about Gaza. Passing thorow a spacious field of Olives, about noon we pitched on a little Hill lying East, and within a furlong of Rama: called Ramula by the Moors, which signifieth tandy. It is seated on a Plain, on a little rising of the earth, stretching North and South, built of free stone, the streets narrow, the houses contemptible. Yet are there many goodly ruins, which testify far better building, especially those of the Christian Churches. Here is a Monastery, much of it standing, founded by Philip the good, Duke of Burgundy; in that place where sometimes stood the House of Nicodemus: built for the relief and safety of Pilgrims in their passage to Jerusalem. And although quitted by the Fryars, yet at this day it serveth to that purpose: called Sion-house, and belongeth to the Monastery of Mount Sion.

Though out of my way, it will not be far from my purpose, to say something of Joppa, which is a Haven, and was a Town ten miles West of this place, and said to have been before the general Deluge. Others write that it was built by Japhet. It stood upon, and under a Hill, from whence, as Strabo reports (but impossible to be true) Jerusalem might be discerned. Having an ill Haven, defended from the South and West, with eminent Rocks, but open to the fury of the North: which driving the waves against the ragged cliffs, do make them more turbulent, and the place less less safe than the open Sea incensed with tempests. Here reigned Cephens (who reaped the same, and called it Joppa) the Son of Phanix, and Father of Andromeda. Who is feigned to have been chained unto a Rock hard by, for the pride of her Mother Calliope, there to be devoured by the Monster.

For Mothers tongue no just 'Jove charg'd that she Should suffer here, who from all faults was free.
Whose arms when Persens saw to hard rocks chain'd,
But that warm tears from her full eye springs rain'd,
And light winds gently fam'd her fluent hair,
He would have thought her marble: e're aware Hid fire be assumeth, and astonish'd by Her beauty, had almost forgot to fly.

—Hic immeritis maternæ pendere linguæ
Andromedam poenas injustus iusserat Ammon
Quam simul ad duras religatam brachia cautes
Vidit Abantides; nisi quod levis aura capillos
Moverat & tepido manabant lumina flens.
Marmoræum ratus esset opus: trahit incitus ignes
Et superæminæ correptus imagine formæ,
Pene suas quætere est oblitus in ære pennas.
Ovid. Met. l. 4.

Who by overcoming the Monster, received her as the reward of his Victory: whom thus Scaliger personates.

My mother err'd: I suffer, yet content
For guilty here to dye, though innocent.
Thy form (O mother) bound me here, but mine
Unbound me: therefore fairer it than thine.
Fairer: nor Nymphs provoke I with my pride.
Most fair and best, that well the tongue can guide.

Erravit genitrix: plestor cur filia? quanquam
Pro fonte in fontem matre perire juvat.
O mater, tuæ facies hic perdidit æqui
Hinc mea me solvit: Pulchior ergo mea est.
Pulchior ergo mea est: nec Nymphas provolonge:
Pulchrius & melius sit bene fecisse loqui.
J. C. Scal.

This is said to have hapned (though intermixed with fiction) about the time that the Judges began to govern in Israel. The Inhabitants many years after religiously preserved sundry old Altars, inscribed with the Titles of Cephens and his Brother Phinæus. Ovid makes Æthiopia the Scene of this Story; but is contradicted by S. Jerom: back with the credits of Pliny and Mela. Marcus Scævola in his Edilship, brought from hence, and produced the bones of this Monster, being by forty foot longer than the Ribs of an Elephant, and the Back-bone half a foot thicker. This City was destroyed by Cæsius: and again (becoming a Receptacle for Pirates) by Vespasian, who here built a Castle to prohibit the like outrages. It was called the Port of Jury, the only one that it had. Then more convenient than now; much of it choaked with sand, and much of it worn with the continual assault of the waters. Of the City there is no part standing more than two little Towers, wherein are certain Harquebushes, a crock for the safeguard of the Harbour. Under the cliff, and opening to the Haven, are certain spacious Caves hewn into the Rock: some used for Ware-houses, and others for shelter. The Merchandizes here imbarqued for Christendom are only Cottons: gathered by certain French-men, who reside at Rama in the House of Sion. The Western Pilgrims do for the most part arrive at this place, and are from hence conducted to Jerusalem by Atala, a Greek of Rama, and Drugardman to the Pater-Guardian, paying seven Santalies apiece for his Mules, his labour and discharge of Caphor. The like rate he hath for bringing them back again: a great expence to poor Pilgrims for so small a Journey; which must be paid, although they accept not of his conduct. Yet by this means they do pass securely, he being in Fee with the Arabians that possesse the Mountains.

Now the Caravan did again divide: the Moors keeping on the way that leadeth to Damascus. Here we should have paid two Dollars apiece for our heads to a Sheek of the Arabs; but the Zanziack of Gaza had sent unto him that it should be remitted. He came unto our Tent, and greedily fed on such Viands as we had set before him. A man of tall stature, clothed in a Gambalock of Scarlet, buttoned under the chin with a Bos of Gold. He had not the patience to expect a present, but he demanded one. We gave him a piece of Sugar, and a pair of Shoes, which he earnestly inquired for, and cheerfully accepted. On the two and twentieth of kind of March, with the rising Sun, we departed from Gaza. A small remainder of that Riding great Caravan; the Nistrains (to name they the Christians of the East) that ride upon Mules and Asses being gone before: amongst whom were two Armenian Bishops, who footed it most of the way; but when (alighting themselves) they were mounted by some of their Nation. Before we were gone far, we were stayed by the Arabs, until they had taken Caphor of the rest. The Subassee of Rama besides had two

Magisters

Maddens upon every Camel. The day thus wasted, did make us misdoubt that we should not get that night unto Jerusalem, but the missing of our way (for the Arabs had left us contrary to the custom) turned our fear to despair. Some six miles beyond Rams the Hills grew bigger and bigger, mixed with fruitful Vallies. About two miles farther we ascended the higher Mountains, paying by the way two Madens a head, but at several places. A passage exceeding difficult; straightened with Wood, and as it were paved with broken Rocks: which by reason of the rain then falling, became no less dangerous to our Camels. At length we came to a small Village where we first discovered our erring. Some counselled to stay, others to proceed; both dangerous alike: the way unknown, unsafe, the Inhabitants Thieves, as are all the Arabians. Whilt we thus debated, the night stole upon us, and bereft us of the election. The much rain enforced us to flee for shelter unto a ruinous Chappel, where distrust set the watch, which we carefully kept till the morning. Betimes we forsook the Village, descending the way we had ascended, guided by the chief of the Town, who for a sum of money had undertaken our conduct to the top of the Mountains: having hired Asses for our more expedition. Yet others crossing us as we returned along the Valley; with shews of violence, would have extorted more money. Our passage for five hours together lay thorow a narrow straight of the Mountains; much of our way no other than such as seemed to have been worn by the Winters Torrent. We past by a ruinous Fort, seated near a Fountain; sufficient, when it flooded, to have made good that passage. In the way we sprang a number of Partridges; others on each side running on the Rocks, like in colour to those of Chios. Ascending by little and little, at length we attained to the top; which over-topt and surveyed all the Mountains that we had left behind us. From hence to Jerusalem the way is indifferent even. On each side are round Hills, with ruins on their top; and Vallies such as are figured in the most beautiful Landships. The soil, though stony, not altogether barren, producing both Corn and Olives about inhabited places. Approaching the North-gate of the City, called in the times past, The Gate of Ephraim, and now of Damascus; we only of all the rest were not permitted to enter. When compassing the Wall unto that of the West, commanded by the Castle, we were met by two Franciscan Fryars, who saluted and conveyed us to their Covent.

Although divers both upon inquisition and view, have with much labour related the fire and state of this City, with the places adjoining, (though not to my knowledge in our Language) inasmuch as I may seem unto some, but to write what hath been written already: yet notwithstanding, as well to continue the course of this discourse, as to deliver the Reader from many erring reports of the too credulous devote, and too too vain glorious: the one,

Seminat in vulgus nugas —

Do toys divulge —

The other characted in the remainder carried in that Distick:

— audique lingue
Auger, & ex humili tumulo producit Olympum.
Bapt. Mant. l. 3.

— Still add to what they hear,
And of a mole-hill do a mountain rear:

I will declare what I have observed, unswayed with either of their vices.

This City, once sacred and glorious, elected by God for his seat, and seated in the midit of Nations; like a Diadem crowning the head of the Mountains; the Theatre of Myteries and Miracles; was founded by Melchisedech (who is said to be Sem the son of Noe, and that not improbably) about the year of the World 2023. and called Salem (by the Gentiles, Solyms, as they write, of the Mountains adjoining, but rather the Mountains of the City) which signifieth Peace: who reigned here fifty years. After possessed by the Jehusites, by them it was named Jebus; who held it wholly or in part eight hundred and four and twenty years: when Sion the Fort still remaining in their hands, being assaulted by David; they placed the blind, the lame, and other ways impotent, upon the Walls, in contempt of his power, as sufficient to repulse such an enemy. But in fine, he took Mount Sion by force, expelled the Jehusites, re-edified and adorned it and the City with goodly buildings: and removing from Hebron, made it the seat of his Kingdom. From thenceforth it was called Jerusalem, which is to say, Jebusalem; converting b into r, for the better harmony. His Son Solomon and the succeeding Kings of Juda much enlarged enlarged the City, then containing in circuit about fifty furlongs: fortified it with stronger Walls and deeper Trenches, hewn out of the living Rock, and added thereunto an absolute perfection by the structure of that magnificent Temple, their sumptuous Palaces, and other stately Edifices. In this excellency it continued for four hundred threecore and seventeen years. When destroyed by Nebuchadrezzar, for threecore and ten years it lay waste, until the Jews returning from that Captivity began to re-edifie the same; which it was un-immured for threecore and three years after: and then effected by Nebemias in the space of two and fifty days. It continued at that time in circuit three and thirty furlongs: and was after enlarged unto threecore. Adorned by the Maccabees; but especially by the many and admirable Buildings erected by Herod, it seemed not much to decline from her former beauty and amplitude. This re-built City flourished for the space of five hundred threecore and two years: and then was destroyed by the wrath of God, and fury of Titus: wherein eleven hundred thousand by Famine, Pestilence, the Enemies Sword, and civil butcheries most desperately perished. Only three Towers, Hippicum, Phasolum and Mariamne (built by Herod and adjoining to his Palace) he left un-razed, exceeding the rest in greatness and beauty; and a part of the Wall which environed the West of the City: both to be a defence to the Romans, and to declare unto posterity the strength of the place, and valour of the Vanquishers. But threecore and five years after, Julius Adrianus inflicting on the rebelling Jews a wonderful slaughter, subverted those remainders, and sprinkled Salt upon the foundation. Where not long after he built a City, but less in circuit: taking in Mount Calvary, and a part of Mount Gibon, with a Valley between; which lay on the West-side, and were excluded in the former City; setting over the Gate that openeth towards Bethlehem the Portraicture of a Swine: prohibiting the Jews for ever to enter, or to much as to look upon it from any more eminent Mountain: and after his own name named it Ælia Capitolia. But not long after inhabited by Christians, and dignified with a Patriarchal See, it recovered the ancient name of Jerusalem; and remained for five hundred years in the possession of the Christians, but not without sundry persecutions. Then taken by the Saracens in the year of our Lord 636, won by Godefroy Bullion in the year 1099, and taken by Saladine in 1187, it was finally conquered by Suleymus in the year 1517, and is now called the Cady of the Mahometans, which signifieth Holy. So that from the first foundation to this present 1611. three thousand five hundred and six and forty years are expired.

Herein I follow the computation of Adrichomius much versed in this argument.

This City is seated upon a rocky Mountain: every way to be ascended (except a little on the North) with steep descents, and deep Vallies naturally fortified: for the most part environed with other not far removed Mountains, as it placed in the midit of an Amphitheater. For on the East is Mount Oliver, separated from the City by the Valley of Jehosaphat (which also circeth a part of the North) on the South the Mountain of Offence, interposed with the Valley of Gebinnon: and on the West it was formerly fenced with the Valley of Gibon, and Mountain adjoining. To speak something thereof as it flourished in the days of our Saviour; it was divided then into four parts, separated by several Walls, stretching East and West, as if so many several Cities. The next the South over-looking the rest, and including Mount Sion, was then called, The upper City, but before, The City of David. In the midit whereof he erected a strong and magnificent Castle: the Seat of the succeeding Kings. In the West corner and upon the wall stood his Tower, of which we shall speak hereafter, as of his Sepulchre, the Canaculum, the house of Annas, and that of Caiphas. Here King Herod built a sumptuous Palace, containing two Houses in one, which he named by the names of Cæsar and Agrippa: adorned with Marble, and shining with Gold: in cost and state superior to the Temple. The walls of this part of the City broken down by Antiochus were strongly repaired by the Maccabees; which adjoining every way with the downfall of the Rock did make it impregnable. But Sion raised in that general subversion, is now for the most part left out of the City. From the upper City they descended into the nether, over a deep Trench, which was called Tyrazon, and plentifully inhabited; now fill'd with rubbish, and hardly distinguishable. This part, as some deliver, was named the daughter of Sion; in greatness by far exceeding the Mount. On the East side of this Sion, upon Mount Maria stood that glorious Temple of Solomon: and between it and the Mount Sion, his Throne, his Palace (which by a high Bridge had a passage into the Temple) the Palace of the Queen, and the house of the Grove of Libanus: now all without the walls of the City.

M

West

West of the Temple, and on a high Rock, the place of the Maccabees was seated, which surveyed the whole City, after re-edified, and dwelt in by King Agrippa, near unto which stood the Theatre built by King Herod, adorned with exquisite Pictures, expressing the Conquests, Trophies, and Triumph of Augustus. Against the South corner of the Temple stood the Hippodrom, made also by Herod; wherein he instituted divers Exercices, of five years continuance; in honour of the Emperour. And when he grew old, and unrecoverably sick, knowing how acceptable his death would be to the Jews, he caused the chief of them to be assembled together, and to be there shut up: that his death accompanied with their slaughter, might at that time in despite of their hatred, procure a general lamentation. Within the West Wall of the City, and near it, was Mount Ara, steep and rocky, where once stood a Citadel erected by Antiochus, and raised by Simon, who abated the extraordinary height thereof, that it might not surmount the Temple: whereon Helena Queen of the Adiabenes (a Nation beyond Euphrates) built her Palace; who converting from Paganism to Judaism, forsook her Country, and dwelt in Jerusalem. Afterward embracing Christian Religion. She much relieved the distressed Christians in that Famine prophesied of by Agabus (which happened in the Reign of Claudius Caesar) with the Corn she bought, and caused to be brought out of Egypt. Without the City she had her Sepulchre not far from the Gate of Ephraim; adorned with three Pyramids, and undenolished in the days of Eusebius. On the North side of Ara stood Herod's Amphitheater, spacious enough to contain fourscore thousand people, imitating in the shews there exhibited, the barbarous cruelty of the Romans. Near unto the North Wall of this second part stood the Common Hall, and Courts of Justice. And adjoining well-nigh to the North side of the Temple, upon a steep Rock fifty Cubits high, stood the Tower of Baris, belonging to the Priest of the Race of Asmoneis. But Herod obtaining the Kingdom, and considering how convenient a place it was to command the City; built thereon a stately strong Castle, having at every corner a Tower, two of them being fifty Cubits in height, and the other two threecore and ten; which, to insinuate with Antonius, he called Antonia. In this the Romans did keep a Garrison, suspiciously over-eying the Temple; lest the Jews being animated with the strength thereof, should attempt some innovation: unto which it was joined by a Bridge of marvellous height, which passed over the artificial Valley of Cedron. On the North side of Antonia, a Gallery crossed the Street (whereof we shall speak hereafter) unto the Palace of the Roman President. Now for the third City, which was but narrow; and whose length did equal the breadth of the other: the West end thereof as the circuit then ran, was wholly possessed by the Royal Mansion of King Herod; confining on the three Walls: for cost excessive, and for strength impregnable; containing Groves, Gardens, Fish-ponds, and other places of delight, and for exercise. On the South-east corner of the wall stood Mariamnes Tower, fifty Cubits high, besides the natural height of the place, of excellent workmanship: built in the memory, and retaining the name of his too wellbeloved Wife by him rashly murdered. On the South-west corner stood that of Phasolus; threecore and ten Cubits high: called after the name of his Brother, (who dashed out his own brains; being contrary to the Law of Nations, surprised and imprisoned by the Parthians) exceeding strong, and in form resembling the Tower of Pharus. And in the North wall on a lofty hill stood the Tower of Hippie, eighty four Cubits high, four-square, and having two spires at the top: in memorial of the Hippies his two friends, and both of them slain in his Wars. In this third City were the Houses of many of the Prophets: and that of Mary the Mother of John, Mark, frequented by the Primitive Christians. The fourth part of Jerusalem lay North of this, and was called the New City: once but a Suburb to the other, and inhabited by the baser Tradesmen. The out-wall of which was re-edified by King Agrippa, and made of a wonderful strength, (the whole City only on that side assailable) in the height twenty five Cubits, and fortified with ninety Towers, two hundred Cubits distant from each other. The soil where the New City stood, and a part of the next, is now left out of the walls of Jerusalem.

Thus little of much have I spoken, and yet by these few imperfect lineaments the perfection thereof may be in some sort conjectured. More will be said when we speak of the Modern exactly represented in the following Figure, with the site of the remarkable places; whereof mention is made in the process of our Journal.

Hic genus, hic animus, hic lachrymas, hic carmina pono: My knees, affections, tears, quest, here place I:
Menque mea ad parvum subvolat aucta potum. My enlarged soul to her heavenly home doth flee.

O promi'd

O promi'd to the Old World, to the New:
That gav'st blest laws of freedom to ensue:
Why left a widow! O what fears disgrace
Thy look! who thus hath backt thy sacred face!
Earth, how shall I thee praise! a fair heaven made.
We made of heaven's, are in base earth array'd.
Thou need'st no praise, nor can our Muse thee adorn
Thou glorious twice that us for thee hast born.

O promissa novo, populo promissa vetusto:
Que libertatis jura beata dabas,
Cur vidua, orbe, jaces? sancti que vulnera vultus:
Quin fuit ætherias quid scidis ille genas?
Quam te terra canam? cœlum que facta serenum es?
Nos facti cœlo fordida terra lumus
Tu nec laudis eges; nec nostro augere cantu:
At me sis te dicti, gloria urique tua est.

I. C. Scal.

1. The Gate of Joppa.
2. The Castle of the Pisans.
3. The Monastery of the Franciscans.
4. The Temple of the Sepulchre.
5. A Mosque, once a Collegiate Church, where stood the house of Zedechus.
6. The Iron Gate.
7. The Church of St. Mark, where his house stood.
8. A Chapel, where once stood the house of St. Thomas.
9. The Church of St. James.
10. The Church of the Angels, where once stood the Palace of Annas the High Priest.
11. The Port of David.
12. The Church of St. Saviour, where stood the Palace of Caiaphas.
13. A Mosque, once a goodly Temple there standing where stood the Cenaculum.
14. Where the Jews would have taken away the body of the Blessed Virgin.
15. Where Peter wept.
16. The Fountain Side.
17. The Fountain of the Blessed Virgin.
18. Port Sierquiline.
19. The Church of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, now converted into a Mosque.
20. The Court of Solomon's Temple.
21. A Mosque, where stood the Temple of Solomon.
22. The Golden Gate.
23. The Gate of St. Steven.
24. The Church of Anna, now a Mosque.
25. The Pool Bethesda.
26. Where the Palace of Pilate stood.
27. Where stood, as they say, the Palace of Herod.
28. Pilates Arch.
29. The Church of the Blessed Virgin's swooning.
30. Where they met Simon of Cyrene.
31. Where the rich Glutton dwelt.
32. Where the Pharisee dwelt.
33. Where Veronica dwelt.
34. The Gate of Justice.
35. Part of Ephraim.
36. The Bazar.
37. The Circuit of part of the old City.

We entered as aforesaid, at the West gate, called the Gate of Joppa. On the right hand, and adjoining to the wall, there standeth a small ill-fortified Castle; yet the only Fort that belongeth to the City; weakly guarded, and not over-well stored with Munitions; built by the Pisians at such time as the Christians inhabited this City. Turning on the left hand, and ascending a part of Mount Gibon, we came to the Monastery of the Franciscans (now being in number between thirty and forty) who in the year 1561. thrust out of that which they had on Mount Sion, had this place assigned them. But of the Founders name I am ignorant: nor is he much wronged by being forgotten, since to mean a building can give no fame to the builder.

The Pater-guardian with due complement entertained us; a reverend old man of a voluble tongue, and winning behaviour. His Name Gaudemius, his Nation Italy, every third third year they are removed, and a successor elected by the Pope, from whom they have a part of their exhibition; the rest from the Spaniard, and Florentine. Nor is it a little that they get by the resort of the Pilgrims of Christendom. For all that come must repair to their Covent, otherwise they shall be accused for spies, and suffer much trouble; the Roman Catholics rewarding them out of devotion, and the rest out of courtesy; which, if short of their expectations, they will repine at as losers. We four, for eight days entertainment, bestowed little less among them than 100 Dollars; and yet they told us that we had hardly paid for what we had eaten. A costly rate for a Monastical diet. But the Turk is much more fierce upon them; awaiting all advantages that may give a colour to extortion. A little before our coming, a Turk being denied by a Friar of some trifle that he requested, gave himself such a blow upon the nose, that the blood gushed forth; and pretently exclaiming as if beaten by the other, complained to the Sanziack; for which Avania they were compelled to part with eight hundred Dollars. Brought much behind-hand, as they alledge, with such losses; they use oft to rehearse them as motives unto charity.

The Covent had also another in-come by the Knights of the Sepulchre, who pay thirty Sultanies a piece to the Pater-guardian, who by the virtue of his Patent doth give them that dignity. The Kings of France were Sovereigns of that Order; by whom it was instituted in the year 1099, who granted them divers immunities. They bare five crosses gules, in form of that which is at this day called, The Jerusalem Cross; representing thereby the five wounds that violated the body of our Saviour. None were to be admitted, if of a defamed life, or not of the Catholic Religion. They are to be Gentlemen of Blood, and to have sufficient means to maintain a port agreeable to that Calling, without the exercise of mechanical Sciences. But now they will except against none that bring money; inasmuch, that at our being there they admitted of a Roman, by trade an Apothecary, late dwelling in Aleppo. They take the Sacrament to hear every day a Mass, if they may conveniently: If Wars be commenced against the Infidels, to serve there in person, or to send others in their stead no less serviceable: To oppugn the persecutors of the Church; to shun unjust Wars, dishonest gain, and private Duels. Lastly, to be reconcilers of dissention, to advance the common good, to defend the Widow and Orphan, to refrain from swearing, perjury, blasphemy, rapine, usury, sacrilege, murder, and drunkenness; to avoid suspected places, the company of infamous persons, to live chastly, irreprovable, and in word and deed to shew themselves worthy of such a dignity. This Oath taken, the Pater-guardian layeth his hand upon his head, as he kneeleth before the entrance of the Tomb, bidding him to be loyal, valiant, virtuous, and an undaunted Souldier of Christ, and that holy Sepulchre. Then gives he him the Spurs, which he puts on his heels, and after that a Sword (the same, as they say, which was Godfrey's of Bulloign) and bids him use it in defence of the Church, and himself, and to the confusion of Infidels; sheathing it again, he girts himself therewith. Who then arising, and forthwith kneeling close to the Sepulchre, inclining his head upon the same, he is created by receiving three strokes on the shoulder, and by saying thrice, I ordain thee a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre of our Lord Jesus Christ, in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Then kills he him, and puts about his neck a Chain of Gold, whereat hangeth a Jerusalem Cross; who arising, kisses the Sepulchre, and restoring the aforelaid Ornaments, departeth. From the top of this Monastery you may survey the most part of this City, whereof much lies waste; the old buildings (except some few) all ruined, the new contemptible, none exceed two stories; the under no better than Vaults; the upper arched above, and standing upon Arches, being well confirmed against fire, as having throughout no combustible matter; the Roofs flat, and covered with plaister. Inhabited it is by Christians out of their devotion; and by Turks, for the benefit received by Christians: otherwise perhaps it would be generally abandoned.

After a little refreshment, the same day we came (which was upon Monday Thursday) we went into the Temple of the Sepulchre; every one carrying with him his Pillow and Carpet. The way from the Monastery continues in a long descent, the East-side of Gibon; and then a little ascendeth to Mount Calvary. Mount Calvary, a rocky Hill, neither high nor ample, was once a place of publick execution; then without, but now well-nigh within the heart of the City; whereupon the Emperor Adrian erected a Fane unto Venus. But the virtuous Helena (of whom our Country may justly glory) overthrow that receptacle of Paganism, and built in the room thereof this magnificent Temple; which not only possesseth the Mount, but the Garden below, together with a part of the Valley of Caracasser (so called, in that that they threw thereinto the bodies of the executed) which lay between Mount Calvary and the Wall of the old City. The Frontispiece opposing the South, of an excellent Structure;

A. The Chapel of the Immolation of Isaac.

B. The ascent thereunto.

having two joyning doors, the one now walled up, supported with Columns of Marble, over which a Transom engraven with historical figures; the Walls and Arches crested and garnished with Floristry. On the left hand there standeth a Tower, now something ruined (once, as some say, a Steeple, and deprived by Saladin of Bells, unsufferable to the Mahometans;) on the right hand, by certain steps, a little Chapel is ascended; coupled above, and sustained at the corners with Pillars of Marble. Below, thorow a Wall, which bounds the East-side of the Court, a pair of stairs do mount to the top of the Rock (yet no Rock evident:) where is a little Chapel built (as they say) in the place where Abraham would have sacrificed Isaac: of much devotion, and kept by the Priest of the Abissines. This joyneth to the top of the Temple, level, and (if I forget not) floored with Plaister. Out of the Temple there arise two ample Cupules: that next the East (covering the East-end and Iles of the Chapel) to be ascended by steps on the outside: the other over the Church of the Sepulchre, being open in the middle. Oh, who can without sorrow, without indignation, behold the enemies of Christ to be the Lords of his Sepulchre! who at festival times sit mounted under a Canopy, to gather money of such as do enter: the profits arising thereof, being farmed at the yearly Rent of eight thousand Sultanies. Each Frank pays fourteen (except he be of some Religious Order, who then, of what Sect soever, is exempted from payments) wherein is included the Impost due at the Gate of the City; but the Christians that be subject to the Turk do pay but a trifle in respect thereof. At other times the door is sealed with the Seal of the Sanziack, and not opened without his direction: whereat there hang seven Cords, which by the Bells that they ring give notice to the seven several Sects of Christians (who live within the Temple continually) of such as would speak with them; which they do thorow a little Wicket; and thereat receive the Provision that is brought them. Now to make the Foundation even in a place so uneven, much of the Rock hath been hewn away, and parts too low supplied with mighty Arches: so that those natural forms are utterly deformed, which would have better satisfied the beholders; and too much regard hath made them less regardable. For, as the Satyr speaketh of the Fountain of Agera.

How much more venerable had it been
If grass had cloth'd the circling banks in green,
Nor Marble had the native Trophies marr'd.

—quanto praestantius esset
Numen aequo viridi si margine clauderet undas
Herba, nec ingenium violarent marmora Tophum.
Juv. Sat. 3.

The Roof of the Temple is of a high pitch, curiously arched, and supported with great Pillars of Marble; the out-lies gallery'd above: the universal Fabrick stately and sumptuous. But before I descend unto a particular Description, I will present you with the Platform, that the intricacies thereof may be the better apprehended.

1. The Entrance.
2. The Stone of the Anointing.
3. The passage to the Sepulchre.
4. The Sepulchre.
5. Where Christ appeared to Mary Magdalene.
6. Where Mary Magdalene stood.
7. The Chappel of the Apparition.
8. The Altar of the Scourging.
9. The Altar of the holy Cross.
10. The Rooms belonging to the Latines.
11. The Chappel of the Angels.
12. The Prison of Christ.
13. The Chappel of the division of his Garments.
14. The descent into the Chappel of S. Helena.

15. The sweating Pillars.
16. The descent into the place of the invention of the Cross.
17. Where the Cross of Christ was found.
18. Where the two others were found.
19. The Chappel of S. Helena.
20. Her Seat.
21. The Chappel of the Descent.
22. The ascent to the Mount Calvary.
23. The Chappel of the Immitation of Isaac.
24. Where Christ was nailed to the Cross.
25. Where Crucified.
26. Where they kept the Altar of Melchisedech.
27. The Rent of the Rock.

28. The Chappel of St. John.
29. Where the Virgin Mary and St. John stood at the time of the Passion.
30. The place which they call the Navel of the World.
31. The Gate of the Church.
32. The Sepulchre.
33. The Foundation of the Tower.
34. The Chappel of the Abissines, over which the Chappel of the Armenians.
35. The Chappel of the Jacobites.
36. The Chappel of the Coptics.
37. The Sepulchre of Joseph of Arimathea under ground.
38. The Chappel of the Georgians.
39. The Chappel of the Maronites.
40. The Chappel of the Maronites.

After we had disposed of our Luggage in part of the North-gallery belonging to the Latines, the Confessor offered to shew us the holy and observable places of the Temple, which we gladly accepted of; he demanding first, if Devotion and Curiosity had posselt us with that desire. So that for omitting Pater Nosters and Ave Marias, we loit many years indulgences, which every place doth plentifully afford to such as affect them; and contented our selves with an historical Relation. Which I will not declare in order as shewn, but take them as they lie from the first entrance of the Temple. Right against the door, in the midst of the South Ile, and level with the Pavement, there lyeth a white Marble, in form of a Graves-stone, environed with a Rale of Brats about a foot high: the place (as they say) where Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus anointed the body of our Saviour with sweet Oynments. This they kiss and kneel to, rubbing thereupon their Crucifixes, Beads, and Handkerchiefs; yea, whole Webs of Linen, which they carry into far Countries, and preserve the same for their shrowding sheets. Over this there hang seven Lamps, which burn continually. Against the East end of the stone there is a little Chappel. Near the entrance, on the right hand, stands the Sepulchre of Godfrey of Balloign; with a Latine Epitaph, thus Englished.

Here lieth the renowned Godfrey of Balloign, who won all this Land to the worship of Christ. Rest my soul in peace. Amen.

On the left hand his Brother Baldwin, with this Inscription:

*Baldwin, the King, another Machabes,
The Churches, Countries, strength, hope, both their glory,
Whom Caesar, Egypt, Dan, Damascus, fraught
With homicides, both fear'd, and tribute brought;
O grief! within this little Tomb dost lie.*

Rex Baldwinus, Judas alter Machabes,
Spes patriæ, vigor Ecclesiæ, virus utriusque:
Quam formidabant qui dona tributa ferebant,
Cæsar, Egypti Dan, ac homicida Damascus,
Proh dolor! in modico clauditur hoc cumulo.

The first and second King of Jerusalem. The farther end of this Chappel, called the Chappel of St. John (and of the Anointing, by reason of the stone which it neighboureth) is confined with the foot of Calvary, where on the left side of the Altar there is a Cleft in the Rock, in which they say, that the head of Adam was found; as they will have it, there buried; others say in Hebron, that his bones might be sprinkled with the real blood of our Saviour, which he knew should be shed in that place by Prophetical fore-knowledge. Over this are the Chappels of Mount Calvary, ascended on the North-side thereof by twenty steps; the highest hewn out of the Rock; as is a part of the passage, obscure and extraordinary narrow. The floor of the first Chappel is checker'd with divers coloured Marbles, not to be trod upon by feet that are shod. At the East-end, under a large arched concave of the Wall, is the place whereon our Saviour did suffer, which may assuredly be thought the time; and if one place be more holy than another, reputed in the World the most venerable. He is void of sense, that fees, believes, and is not then confounded with his passion. The Rock there riseth half a yard higher than the Pavement, level above, in form of an Altar, ten foot long, and six foot broad; flagg'd with white Marble, as is the Arch and Wall that adjoineth. In the midst is the place wherein the Cross did stand, lined with Silver, gilt, and imbossed. This they creep to, prostrate themselves thereunto, kiss, salute; and such as use them, sanctifie therein their Beads and Crucifixes. On either side there standeth a Cross: that on the right side, in the place where the good Thief was crucified; and on the left, where the bad; divided from Christ by the rent of the Rock (a figure of his Spiritual separation) which clove asunder in the hour of his passion. The inlides do testifie that Art had no hand therein; each side to other being answerably rugged, and there were unaccessible to the Work-man. That before spoken of, in the Chappel below, is a part of this; which reacheth (as they say) to the Center. This place belongeth to the Georgians; whose Priests are poor, and accept of alms. No other Nation say Mass on that Altar; over which there hang forty six Lamps, which burn continually; On the self-same floor, of the self-same form in that other Chappel belonging to the Latines, divided only

A. The first Chapel of Mount Calvary.

B. The second Chapel.

C. The Cleft in the Rock.

D. The cleft continuing in the Chapel below, where, they say, the head of Adam was found.

E. The Sepulchre of Godfrey of Bulloign.

F. The Sepulchre of King Baldwin.

G. The Stone of the Anointing.

H. The descent to Mount Calvary.

I. The descent into the place of the invention of the Cross.

K. The Door that enters into the Temple.

only by a Curtain, and entred thorow the former. In the midst of the Pavement is a Square, inclosed with stones of different colours, where Chrill, as they say, was nailed upon the Cross. This place is too holy to be trod upon. They wear the hard stones with their soft knees, and heat them with their fervent kisses: prostrating themselves, and tumbling up and down with such an over-active Zeal, that a fair Greek Virgin, ere aware, one morning shewed more than she intended: whom the Fryar that helpt the Priest to lay Mass, so took at the bound, that it echoed again, and disturbed the mournful Sacrifice with a mirthful clamour; the poor Maid departing with great indignation. Over the Altar, which is finely set forth, three and thirty Lamps are maintained. These two Chappels looking into the Temple, are all that possess the summit of the Rock: excepting that of the Immolation of Isaac, without, and spoken of before; and where they keep the Altar of Melchisedech. Opposite to the door of the Temple, adjoining to the side of the Chancel, are certain Marble Sepulchres without Titles or Epitaphs. Some twenty paces directly West from Mount Calvary, and on that side that adjoyneth to the Tower, a round white Marble, level with the Pavement, retaineth the memory (as they say) of that place where the Blessed Virgin stood, and the Disciple whom Christ loved, when from the Cross he commended each to other, over which there burneth a Lamp. A little on the right hand of this, and towards the West, you pass between certain Pillars into that part of the Church which is called, The Temple of the Resurrection, and of the holy Sepulchre. A stately Round, cloistered below and above; supported with great square Pillars, flagged heretofore with white Marble; but now in many places deprived thereof by the sacrilegious Infidels. Much of the neather Cloister is divided into sundry Chappels belonging unto several Nations and Sects, where they exercise the Rites of their several Religions. The first, on the left hand, to the Abyssinians, the next to the Jacobites, the third to the Coptics (close to which, on the left side of another, there is a Cave hewn out of the Rock, with a narrow entrance, the Sepulchre of Joseph of Arimathea) the fourth to the Georgians, and the fifth to the Maronites. The Chapel of the Armenians possesseth a great part of the Gallery above; and the rest, lying towards the North, belongeth to the Latines, though not employed to Religious uses. Now between the top of the upper Gallery, and extreme of the upright Wall, in several Concaves, are the Pictures of divers of the Saints

Saints

Saints in Mosaic work, full-fac'd, and unheighted with shadows, according to the Grecian painting; but much defaced by malice, or continuance. In the midst, on the South-side, is the Emperor Constantine's, opposite to his mothers, the memorable Foundress. This Round is covered with a Capolo sustained with Rafter of Cedar, each of one piece, being open in the midst like the Pantheon at Rome, whereat it receiveth the light that it hath, and that as much as sufficeth. Just in the midst, and in view of Heaven stands the glorified Sepulchre, a hundred and eight feet distant from Mount Calvary; the natural Rock surmounting the sole of the Temple, abated by Art, and hewn in the form of a Chappel,

A. The Capolo.
B. The Sepulchre.
C. The Portico.D. The Altar within.
E. The inside of the Portico.
F. The entrance of the Portico.G. The entrance of the Sepulchre.
H. The stone, whereon they erroneously say, that the Angel sat.

more

more long than broad, and ending in a semi-circle, all flagged over with white Marble. The hinder part being something more eminent than the other, is environed with ten small Pillars adjoining to the wall, and sustaining the Cornish. On the top (which is flat) and in the midst thereof, a little Cupolo covered with Lead is erected upon six double, but small Corinthian Columns, of polished Porphyry. The other part, being lower than this by the height of the Cornish, smooth above, and not so garnished on the sides (serving as a Lobby or Portico to the former) is entered at the East end; (having before the door a long pavement, erected something above the floor of the Church included between two white Marble walls, not past two foot high) and consisting of the self-same Rock, doth contain therein a Concave about three yards square, the Roof hewn compass, and flagged thorough with white Marble. In the midst of the floor there is a stone about a foot high, and a foot and half square, whereon, they say, that the Angel sat, who told the two Maries that our Saviour was risen. But St. Matthew saith, he sat upon the great stone which he had rolled from the mouth of the Sepulchre; which, as it is said, the Emperors caused to be conveyed to the Church of Saint Saviour, standing where once stood the Palace of Caiaphas. Out of this a passage thorow the midst of the Rock, exceeding not three feet in height, and two in breadth, having a Door of grey stone with hinges of the same, un divided from the natural, affordeth a way to creep thorow into a second Concave, about eight foot square, and as much in height, with a compass Roof of the solid Rock, but lined for the most part with white Marble. On the North-side there is a Tomb of the same, which possesseth one half of the Room; a yard in height, and made in the form of an Altar, inasmuch that not above three can abide there at once; the place no larger than affordeth a liberty for kneeling. It is said, that long after the Resurrection, the Tomb remained in that form wherein it was when our Saviour lay there; when at length, by reason of the devout Pilgrims, who continually bore away little pieces thereof (relicques, whereunto they attributed miraculous effects) it was inclosed within a grate of Iron. But a second inconveniency, which proceeded from the Tapers, hair, and other offerings thrown in by Votaries, which defiled the Monument, procured the pious Helena to enclose the same within this Marble Altar, which now belongeth to the Latines, whereon they only say Mass, yet free for other Christians to exercise their private devotions; being well set forth, and having on the far side an antique and excellent Picture demonstrating the Resurrection. Over it perpetually burneth a number of Lamps, which have fuelled the Roof like the in-side of a Chimney, and yields unto the Room an immoderate fervour. Thousands of Christians perform their vows, and offer their tears yearly, with all the expressions of sorrow, humility, affection and penitence. It is a frozen zeal that will not be warmed with the sight thereof. And, Oh that I could retain the effects that it wrought, with an unfainting perference! who then did dedicate this hymn to my Redeemer.

*Saviour of mankind, Man, Emanuel:
Who sinless died for sin, who vanquish'd Hell:
The first-fruits of the Grave, whose life did give Light to our darkness's in whose death we live:
O strengthen thou my faith, correct my will,
That mine may thine obey, protect me still,
So that the latter death may not devour
My soul seal'd with thy seal. So in the hour
When thou, whose body sanctifi'd this Tomb,
Unjustly judg'd, a glorious Judge shalt come
To judge the world with justice; by that sign
I may be known, and entertain'd for thine.*

Without, and to the West end of this Chappel, another very small one adjoining, used in common by the Egyptians and Aethyopians. Now on the left hand, as you pass unto the Chappel of the Apparitions, there are two round stones of white Marble in the floor: that next the Sepulchre covering the place where our Saviour, and the other where Mary Magdalen stood (as they say) when he appeared unto her. On the North-side, and without the limits of the Temple, stands the Chappel of the Apparitions: so called (as they say) for that Christ in that place did did shew himself to his sorrowful Mother, and comforted her, pierced with anguish for his cruel death, and ignominious sufferings. This belongeth to the Latines, which serveth them also for a Vestry; from whence they proceed unto their pompous Processions. On the East side there stand three Altars: that in the midst in a Closet by it self, dedicated to God and our Lady. That on the right hand is called the Altar of the Holy Cross, whereof a great part was there (as they say) reserved. But when Sultan Selym imprisoned the Friars of Mount Sion, (whom he kept in durance for the space of four years) the Armenians stole it from thence, and carried it to Sebastia, their principal City. That on the left hand in the corner, and near unto the entrance, is called the Altar of the Scourgings; behind which there is a piece of a Pillar, of that (as they say) whereunto our Saviour was bound when they scourged him. This stood on Mount Sion, and there supported the Portico to a Church in the days of Saint Jerome; when broken by the Saracens, the pieces were re-collected, and this part here placed by Christians. Thereto was distributed by Paul the Fourth unto the Emperour Ferdinand, Philip King of Spain, and the Signory of Venice; in honour whereof they celebrate the sixth of April. It is (as I remember) about three foot high, of a dusky black vein'd Marble, spotted here and there with red; which they ascribe to be the marks of his blood wherewith it was besprinkled. Before it there is a Grate of Iron, inasmuch as not to be touch'd but by the mediation of a stick prepared for the purpose; being buttoned at the end with Leather, in manner of a foil, by which they convey their kisses, and bless their lips with the touch of that which hath touch'd the Relique. Through the aforesaid Vestry, a passage leads into certain Rooms, heretofore a part of the Colledge of the Knight-Templars: an Order erected by the Princes of France (of whom the chief were Hugo de Paganis and Godfredus à Sancto Andamaro) about the year of our Lord 1119, in the days of Baldwin the Second, who assigned them this place adjoining to the Temple, and whereupon they were called Templars. It is said, that they received their institutions from St. Bernard, together with their white Habit: and after that, the red Cross from Eugenius the Third Pope of that Name: The one a symbol of innocency, the other of not to be refused Martyrdom; and of the blood which they were profusely to shed in defence of this Country. At first they grew glorious in Arms; then rich in Revenues: which corrupted their virtues, and betrayed them to the most detested kinds of lasciviousness. Inasmuch as by a general Council held in Vienne, in the year 1312, the Order was extinguish'd, and their Lands for the most part confer'd upon the Knight-Hospitallers of Saint Jobus of Jerusalem, of whom we shall speak when we come unto Malta. The Temples in London belonged unto them: where in the Church (built round in imitation of this) divers of their Statues are to be seen, and the posture used in their burials. Here the Franciscans entertained us during our abode in the Temple. Returning again through the Chappel of the Apparition, a little on the left hand there is a concave in the Wall, no bigger than to contain two persons besides the Altar; which is called the Chappel of the Angels: belonging also to the Latines, but lent by them to the despised Nestorians during the celebration of Easter. Winding with the Wall along the outward North-Alley of the Chancel, at the far end thereof there is a Grot hewn out of the Rock, where, they say, that the Jews imprisoned our Saviour, during the time that they were providing things necessary for his crucifying. This is kept by the Georgians, without other ornament than an ungarnished Altar: over which hangeth one only Lamp, which rendereth a dim light to the Prison. Untreading a good part of the aforesaid Alley, we entered the Ile (there but distinguished by Pillars) which borders on the North of the Chancel: and turning on the left hand, where it begins to compass with the East end thereof, we pass'd by a Chappel containing an Altar, but of no regard, wherein they say, the Tide was preserved which was hung over the head of our Saviour: now shown at Rome in the Church of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem. Next to this in the same Wall, and midst of the semi-circle there is another, the place (where they say) the Souldiers did cast lots for his Garments: of which the Armenians have the custody. A little beyond you are to descend a pair of large Stairs of thirty Steps, part of the passage hewn out of the Rock of Calvary, which leadeth into a Lobby: the Roof supported with four massive Pillars of white Marble, which is ever moist through the dampness of the place (being under-ground) and sometimes dropping, are said to weep for the sorrowful passion and death of Christ. At the far end, containing more than half of the Room, is the Chappel of Saint Helena: having two great Altars erected by Christian ilian Princes in her honour: On the South-side there is a Seat of Stone, over-looking a pair of Stairs which descend into the place of the invention of the Cross: where they say, that the fate which the Souldiers removed the rubbish that had covered it. These Stairs (eleven in number) conduce into an obscure Vault, a part of the Valley of Carcasses. There threw they our Saviours Cross, and covered it with the hilt of the City: when after three hundred years, the Empress Helena travelling unto Jerusalem in the extremity of her age, to behold those places which Christ had sanctified with his corporal presence, threatened torture and death to certain of the principal Jews, if they would not reveal where their Ancestors had hid it. At last forsooth they wrestled the truth from an old Jew, one Judas, first almost famished: who brought them to this place. Where, after he had petitioned Heaven for the discovery, the earth trembled, and breathed from her crannies Aromatick odours. By which miracle confirmed, the Emperour caused the rubbish to be removed, where they found three Crosses, and hard by the Supercription. But when not able to distinguish the right from the other, they say that Macarius, then Bishop of Jerusalem, repairing together with the Empress unto the House of a Noble woman of this City, uncurably diseased, did with the touch of the true Cross restore her to health. At light whereof the Jew became a Christian, and was called thereupon Quiricus. Being after Bishop of Jerusalem, in the Reign of Julian the Apostate, he was crowned with Martyrdom. At which time it was decreed, that no Malefactor should thenceforth suffer on the Cross; and that the third of May should be for ever celebrated in the memorial of that Invention. In this Vault are two Altars, the one where the Cross of Christ was found, and the other where the other. Ascending again by the aforesaid stair into the Temple; on the left hand between the entrance and Mount Calvary, there is a little Room which is called the Chappel of the Descent. Where under the Altar is reserved a part (as they say) of that Pillar to which Christ was bound, when Pilate Servants crowned him with Thorns, being clothed in an old Purple Robe, and placed a Reed in his hand, instead of a Scepter, crying, Hail, King of the Jews: with other opprobrious taunts and revilings. This is kept by the Abissinians. Now nothing remaineth to speak of, but the Quire, not differing from those in our Cathedral Churches. The West end openeth upon the Sepulchre: the East ending in a semicircle, together with the Isles, is covered with a high Cupolo: on each side stand opposite doors which open into the North and South Alleys; all jointly called the Temple of Golgotha. A partition at the upper end excludeth the half round (behind which is their high Altar) which riseth in a manner of a lofty Screen, all richly gilded (as most of the Chancel) and adorned with the Pictures of the Saints Antique Habits: flat and full-faced, according to the manner of the Grecians, to whom this place is assigned. Towards the West end from each side equally distant, there is a little pit in the pavement, (which they say) is the Navel of the World, and endeavour to confirm it with that saying of the Scripture, God wrought his Salvation in the midst of the earth, which they fill with holy water. The universal Fabrick, maintained by the Greek Emperours during their Sovereignty, and then by the Christian Kings of Jerusalem, hath since been repaired in the several parts by their particular owners. The whole of so strong a constitution, has rather decayed in beauty than substance.

Having visited these places which below their several Indulgences, (and are honoured with particular Orisons) after Even-song, and Procession, the Pater-guardian putting off his pontifical Habit, and clothed in a long Vest of Linen girt close unto him, first washed the feet of his fellow Fryars, and then of the Pilgrims: which dried by others, he kissed with all outward shew of humility. The next day being Good Friday, amongst other Solemnities, they carried the Image of Christ on a sheet, supported by the four corners, in procession, with Banners of the Passion: first to the place where he was imprisoned, then in order to the others; performing at each their appointed Devotions. Laying it where they say he was fixed on the Cross, the Fryar-Precator made over it a short and passionate Oration; who asked his part so well, that he begot tears in others with his own, and taught them how to be sorrowful. At length they brought it to the place, where, they say, he was enbalm'd: where the Pater-guardian anointed the Image with sweet Oyls, and strewed it with Aromatick Powders, and from thence conveyed it to the Sepulchre. At night the lights put out, and company removed, they whipped themselves in their Chappel of Mount Calvary. On Sunday their other Solemnities performed, they carried the Cross in procession, with the Banners of the burial, to the aforesaid Chappel, creeping to it, kissing, and lying groveling over it. On Easter day they said solemn Service before the door of the Sepulchre. The whole Chappel covered on the out-side with cloth of Tissue; the gilt (as appareth by the Arms embrodered thereon) of the Florentine. In this they shewed the variety of their Wardrobe; and conclude with a triumphant procession, bearing about the Banners of the Resurrection. Those ceremonies that are not local, I willingly omit. At noon we departed to the Monastery, having lain on the hard stoues for three nights together, and tired as hardly.

said

The other Christians (excepting such as inhabit, within of each sort a few, and those of the Clergy) entered not until Good-friday, being Grecians, Armenians, Coptics, Abissinians, Jacobites, Georgians, Maronites, and Nestorians. Of the Grecians, Coptics, and Armenians no more shall be said (since we have spoken of them already) than concerns the celebration of this Festival.

The Abissinians or Ethiopiens be descended of the cursed generation of Chus. But their Emperours do derive themselves from Solomon, of one begotten by him on the Queen of Saba, in regard whereof they have ever favoured that Nation. They received the Doctrine of Christ from the Eunuch instructed by Philip: which in the Year of our Lord 470. did generally propagate thoroughout all Ethiopia, under the Reign of Abraham and Abba, two brethren: who thereupon were titled the Propagators and Defenders of the Christian Religion; Abraham out-living his Brother, (and after his own death canonized by their Clergy) to avoid diffusion in his posterity, (so advised, as they say, by a Vision) was he that first confined the Royal progeny within high and un-ascendable Mountains, having only one entrance, and that impregnable fortified. A custom observed to this day, wherein they enjoy whatsoever is fit for Delight, or Princely Education. Out of these, if the Emperour die son-less, a Successor is chosen, of such a Spirit as their present affairs do require. There have they the goodliest Library in the World, where many Books that are lost with us, or but merely mentioned, are kept entire, as hath been lately reported by a Spanish Friar that hath seen them, if we may believe him; amongst which, they say, are the Oracles of Enoch (with other mysteries that escaped the Flood, engraven by him upon Pillars) and written in their Vulgar Language. The Priests do marry but once, they labour for their livings, and have their preferments given them by the King. They shave their heads, and foster their beards, contrary to the Laity. The chief of them are Judges in causes, as well Civil as Ecclesiastical. They acknowledge the Patriarch of Alexandria for their Primate, I mean the Patriarch of the Circumcised. Pictures they have in their Churches, but no carved Images; neither below they upon them any undue reverence. They admit of no Crucifixes. The Cross they use as a badge of their profession, and according to the first Institution. Men and Women are both circumcised, not as a matter of Religion, but as the Coptics do, out of an ancient custom of their Nation: their Priests say, that they now do it in imitation of our Saviour. They baptize not the Male until forty, nor the Female until threescore days old; and if it die in the mean time, they say, that the Eucharist received by the Mother when it was in her Womb, is sufficient to save. Upon the twelfth day, they Baptize yearly, and have certain Ponds and Lakes reserved for that purpose: Which they do not Sacramentally, but in memorial that Christ was at this day baptized by John in Jordan; a custom introduced not past an hundred years since, by a King of Ethiopia. They receive the Eucharist in both kinds, but with Unleavened Bread, nor sip they all the day after. Incense they use and Holy-water. Confess they do, but not greatly in private. The Lent is most strictly observed by them, wherein they eat little but Herbs and Fruits, and that not until Sun-set. During which time, not a few of their Priests do flie the comon use of men, lying in Caves and Darts, and inflicting on themselves excessive Penance. They abstain from such meats as were prohibited to the Jews, and celebrate the Saturday as well as the Sunday. All the Passion-week they forbear to lay Maids, putting on mourning Garments, and countenances suitable. They use no extrem-unction, but carry the Dead to the Grave with the Cross, the Censer and Holy-water, and lay Service over them. To conclude, they join with the Coptics for the most part in substance of Religion, and in Ceremony, one Priest here serving both: an Ethiopian, poor, and accompanied with few of his Nations; who fantastically clad, doth dance in their processions with a skipping motion, and distortion of his body, not unlike to our Antiques. To which their Music is answerable; the Instruments no other than Snappers, Gingles, gles,

N

gles, and round bottom'd Drums, born upon the back of one, and beaten upon by the followers.

The Jacobites are so called of Jacobus the Syrian, an obscure Fellow, and of no reputation, who for his poverty was named Zanzalus. He infected these Countries with divers heretical opinions; amongst the rest, that the God-head of Christ was passible, and confuted with his Manhood. They mark their Children before Baptism with the sign of the Cross. They use not auricular confession; pray not for the dead; reject the opinion of Purgatory; believe that the Soul doth rest in the Grave with the Body, and shall so do till Christ's second coming. The Priests do marry, and they in both kinds communicate in the Sacrament. They reject the fourth Synod, and authority of the Fathers. This Sect began in the days of the Emperour Murimus, dispersing through the Cities of Syria, Mesopotamia, and Chaldea; yet under other names their Religion extendeth far further, the Coptics and Abyssinians being in a manner no other than Jacobites. They had two Patriarchs; one resident in the Mountain Tur, the other in the Monastery of Gifian, near unto the City Madin, seated (they say) on so high a Mountain, that no Bird flieth over it. But now they have but one Patriarch, and that he of Gifian, always a Monk of the Order of St. Anthony, and named Ignatius, filling himself the Patriarch of Antioch, who for the more convenience is removed to Carmis. They have a Bishop still residing in Jerusalem; the Patriarch wherof is alto a Jacobite.

The Georgians differ not much from the Grecians in their opinions; not called (as some write) of Saint George their selected Patron, but of their Country, so named long before the time wherein he is supposed to have lived; lying between Colchis, Caucasus, the Caspian Sea, and Armenia, heretofore Iberia and Albania. A warlike people, infected on both sides with the Turkish and Persian insolencies. They have a Metropolitan of their own; some say, the same that is resident in Mount Sinai. They say that they marry within prohibited degrees: they are divided into eighteen Bishopsicks, and are not here to be distinguished from the Syrians, nor they from them, being almost of one Religion, and called Melchites heretofore of their Adversaries, which signifieth a King in the Syrian tongue, for that they would not embrace the Heresies of Eutyches and Dioscorus, but obeyed the Edict of the Emperour, and Council of Chalcedon. Their Patriarch is the true Patriarch of Antioch, who abides in Damasco, for that Antioch lies now well nigh desolate. The Bishop is here poor, so are his Ornaments; in their processions, for state, or in regard of his age, supported on both sides. Their music-less Instruments are fans of Brasse, hung about with Rings, which they jingle in strops according to their marchings.

The Maronites are Christians inhabiting Mount Libanus, so called of Maron a Village adjoining, or of Maro their Abbot: they use the Chaldean tongue, and Syrian character, in holy matters. A limb they were of the Jacobites, and once subject to the Patriarch of Antioch, but won to the Papacy by John Baptist a Jesuite, in the days of Gregory the thirteenth, who sent them a Catechism Printed at Rome in the Arabian language, so that now they do join with the Latines; an ignorant people, easily drawn to any Religion, that could not give a reason for their own: poor in substance, and few in number.

But the Greeks do here surpass all the rest in multitudes; and the Armenians in bravery, who instead of Musical Instruments, have Sawcers of Brasse (which they strike against one another) set about with gingles. All differ in habit, and most in rites; yet all conjoin (the Latines excepted) in celebration of that impolity of fetching fire from the Sepulchre upon Easter-Eve. The Turks deride, yet throng to behold it, the Galleries of the round Temple being pestered with spectators. All the Lamps within the Church are at that time extinguished; when they often compassing the Sepulchre in a joint procession, are fore-run and followed by the people with savage clamours (the women whistling) and frantick behaviours, behting better the solemnities of Bacchus, extending their bare arms with unlighted Tapers. At length the chief Bishops approach the door of the Sepulchre, but the Ethiopian Priest first enters, (without whom, they say, the miracle will not fadge) who utter a long lay (mean while the people hurrying about like mad men) returns with the sacred flame, supposed at his prayers to burst out of the Sepulchre; wherewith confusedly they fire their lights, and snatching them one from another, strive who should convey it to their particular Chappels, thrusting the flame amongst their cloaths, and into their bosoms, (but swiftly withdrawing it) perswading Strangers that it will not burn them:

them: kindling therewith all their Lamps, unlighted with other fire until that day twelve-month.

But I had almost forgot the Nestorians, so called of Nestorius, by birth a German, who lived in the days of Theodosius, and was by him made Bishop of Constantinople. These hated of the rest, in an obscure corner, without Ceremonies or Pontifical habit, full of seeming zeal and humility, do read the Scriptures, and in both kinds administer the Sacrament, denying the real presence: the Priest (not distinguished from the rest in habit) breaking the bread, and laying it in the palm of the Communicants hand, they sipping of the Cup which is held between his hands. They kiss the Cross, but pray not before it, nor reverence they Images. They will not have Mary to be called the Mother of God. Their chiefest Heresie is, that they divide the Divinity of Christ from his Humanity. Their Doctrine disperseth it self throughout all the East, by means of Cosro the Persian King, who intored all the Christians within his Dominion (out of a mortal hatred that he bare to the Emperour Heraclius) either to forsake his Empire, or to become Nestorians: as thorow a great part of Cataia. It is now embraced but by few, most of that Sect inhabiting about Babylon. Their Patriarchal Seat is Musal in Mesopotamia, seated on the Bank of Tygris: their Patriarch not elected, but the dignity descending from the Father to the Son. For Marriage, it is generally allowed in their Clergy; and when Widowers, to marry again at their pleasure. They have the Scriptures, and execute the Ministry in the Chaldean Tongue. They allow not of the Council of Ephesus, nor any that succeeded it.

All this while there was no less than a thousand Christians, Men, Women, and Children, who fed and lodged upon the Pavement of the Temple. On Easter day about one of the clock in the morning, the Nations and Sects above-mentioned with joyful clamors, according to their several Customs, circled the Church, and visited the holy places in a solemn Procession; and so for that time concluding that Ceremony, departed.

Upon Easter-Monday we hired certain Asses to ride to Emanus, accompanied with a Guard, and certain of the Fryars. About the mid-way, at the foot of a Hill, there are the ruins of a Monastery, built by St. Helena, they say, in that place where Jesus appeared to the two Disciples. Here the Latines performed certain devotions, and took of the stones (as generally they did from all such like places) preserved as precious. Emanus stands seven miles off, and West of Jerusalem. The way thither mountainous, and in many places as if paved with a continual Rock; yet where there is earth, sufficiently fruitful. It was seated (for now it is not) upon the South-side of a Hill, overlooking a little Valley, fruitful in Fountains. Honoured with the presence of our Saviour, who was there known by the breaking of bread, in the house of Cleophas his Cousin-german, and afterward the second Bishop of Jerusalem. In the self-same place a Temple was erected by Paula (a Roman Lady, of whom we shall speak hereafter) whose ruins are yet extant, near the top of the Mountain; unto which the Arabians would not suffer us to ascend, who inhabit below in a few poor Cottages, until we had paid the Capbar they demanded. This City was burnt in the Jewish Wars, by the commandment of Varrus: and upon the destruction of Jerusalem, re-edified by the Romans, who, in regard of their Victory, called it Nicopolis. In the year 123. thrown down by an Earth-quake, it was fourscore and twelve years after restored by the Emperour Marcus Aurelius: and afterward dignified, during the Government of the Christians, with an Episcopal See, being under the Metropolitan of Cæsarea. Nicophorus, and the Tripartite History report of a miraculous Fountain by the highway side, where Christ would have departed from the two Disciples: who, when he was conversant upon earth, and wearied with a long journey, there washed his feet; the water from thenceforth retaining a curable virtue against all Diseases. But relations of that kind have credit only in places far distant. In our return, we inclined a little to the left hand, and after a while ascended to the top of a Mountain, (whose Western Valley was the field, they say, or that Battel, when the Sun and Moon stood still at the commandment of Jesus.) Out of the ruins of an ancient Building a small Mosque is advanced, where they would that the Prophet Samuel was buried, who had his Sepulchre in Ramoth on Mount Ephraim, though divers other Towns so seated, are so called; which signifieth high in their Language. But our Guides were well practised in that precept;

Atque aliqua ex illis dum regum nomina querunt,
Que loca, qui mores, quæve feruntur aquæ:
Omnia responde; nec tantum si qua rogabit,
Et quæ nescitis, ut bene nota refer.

Ovid.

N 2

who

who endeavour to bring all remarkable places within the compass of their Proceffions. The Mahometans, either deceived with this Tradition, or maintaining the report for their profit, would not suffer us to enter but at an excessive rate; which we refused to part with. The next Mountain unto this doth wear on his Crown the ruins of a Castle that belonged to the Macebees. Another more humble, and nearer the City, presenteth a pile of stones, square, flat, and solid: the Sepulchre, they say, of the seven Brethren who were tortured to death by Antiochus. Whom I rather judge to have been buried at Modin, the ancient seat of that Family; which stands on the uttermost confines of the Mountains of Judea, where were to be seen seven Sepulchres of white Marble, each bearing a Pyramid on his square; laid by Josephus to have served, in his time, for Sea-marks. From hence we approached the North-West side of the City, where, in the Vineyards, are sundry places of Burial hewn out of the main Rock: amongst the rest, one called the Sepulchre of the Prophets. The first entrance large, and like the Mantle-tree of a Chimney; cut curiously on the outside: thorow which we crept into a little square room, (every one carrying a Light in his hand) the sides cut full of holes (in manner of a Dove-house:) two yards deep, and three quarters square. Out of that Room we descended by two straight passages into two other Rooms, likewise under ground: yet more spacious, and of better workmanship, but surrounded with the Sepulchres as the former: neighboured with a Vault, which serves for a Cistern, and is filled with a living Fountain. A little beyond, upon the West-side of a large square Court, hewn into the Rock some three fathoms deep, and entered under the Arch of the same, there is another mansion for the dead, having a Porch like to that of the Prophets, and garnished without (amongst other Figures) with two great Clusters of Grapes, in memorial of those, as they say, which were brought by the Spies into the Host of the Hebrews. On the left hand you creep thorow a difficult descent, which leadeth into fair Rooms under the ground, and one within another; benched about with Coffins of stone bereft of their Covers, there being some bones yet remaining in some of them. This is famed to be the household Monument of certain of the Kings of Judah. In which there is nothing more admirable, than is the artificial contriving of the doors, the hinges and all, of the self-same stone, unseparated from the Rock without other supplement. Hitherto (if no further) by all likelihood the City extended. From hence we returned to the Centre.

The day following we rid towards Bethlehem; which stands about six miles South from Jerusalem. Going out of the Gate of Joppa, and turning on the left

and

- A The ruins of David's Tower.
 B Bethsheba's Fountain.
 C The Turpentine Tree.
 D The Tower of Simeon.
 E The Cistern of the Sages.
 F The Church of Habakkuk.
 G The Monastery of Elias.
 H Elias his Image.
 I Jacob's house.
 K The field where the Inhabitants gather little stones like pease, and sell them to Pilgrims who

- keep them in honour of the blessed Virgin.
 L The Sepulchre of Rachel.
 M Ramah.
 N The Cistern of David.
 O The Monastery of Bethlehem.
 P The house of Joseph.
 Q The Village of the Shepherds.
 R Where they kept their sheep.
 S The Mountains of Bethlehem.
 T The Mountains of Arabia.
 V The Monastery of the holy Cross.

hand by the foot of Mount Sion. Aloft on whose uttermost angle stood the Tower of David (whose ruins are yet extant) of a wonderful strength and admirable beauty, adorned with Shields and the Arms of the Mighty. Below on the right hand of the way in our passage, they shewed us a Fountain at the South side of a square Scraggio, delivered to be that wherein Bethsheba bathed. North of which, the Valley is crossed with a ruinous Aqueduct, which conveyed water unto the Temple of Solomon. Ascending the opposite Mountain, we passed through a Country, hilly, and stony; yet not utterly forsaken of the Vine, though only planted by Christians, in many places producing Corn, here shadowed with the Fig-tree, and there with the Olive. Sundry small Turrets are dispersed about, which serve for solace, as well as for safe-guard. Some two miles from the City, on the left hand, and by the Highway side, there groweth a Turpentine Tree, yet flourishing, which is said to have afforded a shelter to the Virgin Mary, as she passed between Bethlehem and Jerusalem. This Tradition however absurd, is generally believed by those Christians, a place of high repute in their Devotions. Towards the West, above two miles off, on a little Hill stands an ancient Tower, which is said to have been the Habitation of Simeon. A mile beyond the foresaid Tree, in the midst of the way, there is a Cistern, vast within, and square at the mouth, which is called the Cistern of the Star. For that (as they say) the Wife-men of the East, there first again did see that conducting Star, which went before them to the place of our Saviour's Nativity. A little on the right hand, there are the small remains of an ancient Monastery, built, they affirm, in that place where the Angel took up Habakkuk by the Hair of the Head, and conveyed him to Babylon. Half a mile further, on the left-side of the way, there is another Religious House, but in good repair, in form of a Fortress, and environed with high Walls, to withstand the insolencies of the Infidels; possessed by the Greek Colonians, and dedicated to Elias. Hard by, there is a flat Rock, whereon they told us that the Prophet accustomed to sleep, and that it bears as yet, the impression of his body. Indeed there are certain hollows in the same, but not by mine eyes apprehended to retain any manly proportion. As far beyond, are the decays of a Church, which stood (as they say) in the place where the Patriarch Jacob inhabited. About a mile further West of the way, and a little off, stands the Sepulchre of Rachel, (by the Scripture affirmed to have been buried hereabout) if the entireness thereof do not confute the imputed antiquity, yet kept perhaps in repair by her off-spring as a monument of venerable memory. The Tomb it self resembleth a great Trunk, covered with a Cupolo, mounted on a square, which hath on each side an ample Arch sustained only by the corners. This is environed with a four-square Wall, within which stand two other Sepulchres, little, but of the same proportion; kept, and used for a place of prayer by the Mahometans. Below it on the side of a Mountain, stands the ruins of that Rama, whereof the Prophet: A voice was heard in Rama, Rachel weeping for her Children, &c. From this ridge of the Hills, the Dead Sea doth appear as if near at hand, but not so found by the Traveller; for that those high declining Mountains are not to be directly descended. Within half a mile of Bethlehem, separated from the same by a Valley, and a little on the left hand of the way, are the Cisterns of David, whereof he so much desired to drink, and when they brought him of the water, he refused it: A large deep Vault, now out of use, having only two small Tunnels at the top, by which they draw up the water.

And now we are come to Bethlehem, first called Ephrath of Ephrath, the Wife of Caleb. A City of David, the long possession of his Ancestors, and not the least amongst the Princes of Juda; seated on the utmost of the Ridge of a Hill, stretching East and West; in a happy soil, and most delicate prospect.

N 3

For

O sola magnarum urbium,
Major Bethlehem, cui contigit
Ducem salutis cœlestis, Incorporatum gignere.
Quam Stella quæ Solis rostrum
Vincit decore ac lumine,
Venisse terris nunciat
Dum carne terrestri Deum.
Prudentius in Hymno.

Of Cities greater than the Great
O Bethlehem, in the happy birth
Of God and man, from Heavens high seat
Come to incorporate with Earth,
Lo! Man Redeemer, frail, divine;
When born declar'd by that fair Star
To wandering eyes; which did outshine
The radiant Saints flame bearing carr.

For when Augustus Cæsar had appointed that all the World should be taxed, every one repaired unto the City of his Family; and Joseph with Mary came up to Bethlehem, where in a Grot at the East-side of a City, employed for a Stable (the Inn being pestered with strangers) the fell in Travel, and produced unto the World a Saviour. In this Cave from the time of Adrian, unto the Reign of Constantine, they celebrated the impious lamentation of Adonis (much honoured by the Syrians) who above had his Statue shadowed with a Grove of Myrtles. Which the virtuous Helena subverted, and erected thereupon this goodly Temple (yet entire, and possess'd by the Franciscans of Jerusalem, of whom some few are here continually resident) and called it Saint Mariæ of Bethlehem: In form it representeth

- A. The first entrance.
B. The second.
C. The body of the Church.
D. The Chapel of the Grecians.
E. The Altar of the Circumcision.
F. The Chancel, with the delineation of the place of Christ's Nativity, &c. under ground.
G. The Chapel of S. Katherine.
H. The Vestry.
I. The Porch.
K. The Garden.

ons of the place of Christ's Nativity, &c. under ground.
G. The Chapel of S. Katherine.

- L. The old Vestry.
M. The dividing room.
N. The ruined tower.
O. The lodging of the Armenians.
P. The lodging of the Grecians.

a Cross

a Cross; the stalk whereof compriseth the body, and is entered at the lower end through a portico sustained with sixteen pillars. The Roof, in the middle, is lofty, flat, and (if I forget not) of Cedar; the sides of the same Fabrick (but much more humble) are upheld with four ranks of Pillars, ten in a row, each of one entire Marble, white, and in many places beautifully speckled; the largest, and fairest that ever I saw; whose upper ends do declare, that they have in part been exquisitely gilded. The Walls are flagged with large Tables of white Marble, well-nigh to the top; the rest adorned with Mosaick painting, although now greatly defaced. It is both here Reported and Recorded by History, that a Sultan of Egypt allured with their beauty, set certain Masons on work to take down those Tables, with intent to have transported them unto his Castle of Cairo; when a dreadful Serpent issued out of the Wall, and brake in pieces such as were removed, so that terrified therewith, he desisted from his enterprize. The three upper ends of the Cross do end in three Semi-circles, having in each an Altar. In the midst stands a Chancel, roofed with a flatly Cupulo, covered without with Lead, garnished within with Mosaick Figures. This Church is left for the most part desolate, the Altar naked, no Lamps maintained, no Service celebrated, except at times extraordinary: yet are there a few poor Greeks and Arminians, who inhabit within on the right hand of the entrance, and in the opposite corners. Adjoining on the left hand stands the Monastery of the Franciscans, entered through the Church, sufficiently spacious, but of no commendable building, accommodated with divers Gardens, and environed with defensible walls; at whole North-west corner, a tottered Tower doth challenge regard for the waste received in that places protection. They brought us into their Chapel, not slightly set forth and dedicated to S. Katherine, having Indulgencies conferred thereupon from Mount Sinai. From which we descended with Lights in our hands; and then were led

- A. The Altar of Nativity.
B. The Manger.
C. The Altar of the Magi.
D. The stairs that ascend into the Temple above.
E. The entry.
F. The Chapel of the Innocents.
G. The Sepulchre of Eusebius.
H. The Sepulchre of Saint Jerome.
I. The Sepulchre of Paul and Eusebius.
K. S. Jerome's study.
L. The ascent into the Chapel of S. Katherine.
M. The Chapel of S. Katherine.
N. The Oratories.

by a narrow long Entry, into a little square Cave, supported in the midst with a Pillar of the Rock. On the left hand stands an Altar, and under that is a passage into a Vault, wherein they say, that the Infants slain by the bloody Edict of Herod, were buried. Out of this Cave or Chapel, there are two other Entries; in that on the right hand, stands the Sepulchre of Eusebius, the Confessor, and Disciple unto S. Jerome. This directeth into another Grot, wherein are two Tombs, in form not unlike unto Altars; the farther farther contained the body of Paula a Roman Lady, defended of the ancient Faints lies of Gracchi and Cornelii, who stands indebted to S. Jerom for this Epitaph :

*Scipio quam genus Paulæ fudere parentes,
Græchorum soboles Agamemnonis inclita proles,
Hoc jacet in tumulo : Paulam dixere priores.
Eulochii generis : Romani prima Senatus, Pauperem Christi Bethlemitica rura sequuta.*

*Scipio begot who Paula bore. Th' off-spring
Of Gracchus, of the fam'd Miceonian King,
Here lies : earst Paula called : Mother to Eulochius, chief of Rome's grave Senate ; who
To Christ and Bethlem vow'd, bade pomp adieu.*

ingraving also on the Front of the Entrance,

*Aspicis angustum præcisa rupe sepulchrum ?
Hospitium Paulæ est, coelestia regna tenentis,
Fratrem, cognatos, Romanæ Patriamque relinquens,
Divitias, sobolem, Bethlemita conditur antro.
Hic præseppe tuum, Christæ, acque hic mystica Magi Munera portantes hominique Deoque dedere.*

*Seest thou this Tomb hewn in the growing Stone ?
'Tis Paula's Inn, posselt of Heavenly throne,
Who leaving Brother, Kindred, Rome, what gave
Her birth, wealth, children, lies in Bethlems Cave.
Christ, here's thy Cratch : the Wise did hither bring Mysterious gifts, to God, a Man, a King.*

Her Son Enochius lies with her in the self same Monument. She built four Monasteries near adjoining to this Temple (whose ruins no yet give testimony of her Piety, one she planted with nuns, the three other with Virgins, who never pass the bounds of their Convents but on Sundays only) and then attending on their several Governesses, to perform their Oraisons in the Church, and Cave of the Nativity : her self the Abbess of one of them, and so for the space of twenty years did continue. She likewise built an adjoining Hospital for Pilgrims, whose ruins declare it to have been no mean Fabric. The other Tomb did cover the body of S. Jerome, who lived in her time, and in the Monastery which he had founded : his bones, together with the bones of Eusebius, were translated to Rome, and shrouded in the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore, over which Pope Sixtus Quintus hath erected a sumptuous Chappel. Out of this we pass into another Grot, which they call his Cell, wherein he lay (as they say) full fifty years, and six months, and there twice translated the Bible. Returning into the afore said Chappel of the Innocents, by the other entry we passed into a Vault or Chappel,

A. The Altar of the Nativity.
B. The Manger.
C. The Altar of the Magi.

D. The Stairs that ascend into the Temple above.
E. The picture of the imaginary figure of Saint Jerom.

twelve

twelve foot wide, forty long, and fifteen in height, the sides and floor all lined with fair white Marble : the compass'd roof adorned with Mof-work, and Mosaic gilding, though now much perished. At the upper end, in an arched Concave, stands an Altar garnished with a Table of the Nativity. Under this is a semicircle ; the sole set forth with stones of several colours, in the form of a Star ; and in the midst a Serpentine, there set to preserve the memory of that place where our Saviour was born. The credit wherof I will neither impeach nor enforce. In this City it was, and in a Stable ; nor is the report by the lie refused, though under ground, hewn out of the living Rock, as is the rest before spoken of. For he that travels through these Countries, will not wonder to see such Caves employed to like uses. Neither is it likely, that they that succeeded those times so nearly, should be in that place so celebrated in their devotions, and beautified with such cost. On either side of this Altar, in the corners, there are two equal ascents, which lead on the opposite outides of the Chancel, closed with doors of brass cut thorow : thorow which they pass in their solemn Procession. Now on the South-side, and near unto the foot of the stairs, you descend by three steps into a lesser Grot ; separated only from the former by three fine Columns of divers-coloured Marble, which seem to support the over-hanging Rock. On the West-side there is a Manger hewn out in a Concave, about two foot high from the floor, and a little way hollowed within : wherein they say, that our new-born Saviour was laid by the Virgin ; now flagged about with white Marble, as the Rock that roots it ; at the left end sustained with a short Serpentine Pillar. In the bottom of this Manger, and just in the middle, a round Serpentine is set, to denote the place where he lay, which retaineth, as they would make us believe, the Effigies of S. Jerom ; miraculously flamed by the natural veins of the stone, in reward of his often and affectionate kisses. But surely, they be the eyes of faith that must apprehend it : yet present they it in picture, as it is set forth in the former Table. On the opposite side of this Grot there is a Bench in the Rock, not unlike to an Altar, where the Magi of the East, that were conducted hither by the Star, disposed, as they say, of their Presents. Whom they of Colen will have to be Kings, and three in number : and moreover, that they returned no more into their Countries, but came and dwelt in their City ; where, in their principal Church, these Verses are extant :

*Three Kings, the King of Kings, three gifts did bring ;
Myrrh, Incense, Gold, as to Man, God, a King.
Three holy gifts be likewise given by thee
To Christ, even such as acceptable be.
For Myrrh, tears ; for Frankincense, impart
Submissive prayers : for pure Gold, a pure heart.*

*Tres Reges, Regi Regum, tria dona ferebant ;
Myrrham homini, onctæ aurum, thura dedere Deo ;
Tu tria facultatem dones pia munera Christo ;
Muneribus gratus si cupis esse tuis.
Pro Myrrha lacrymas, auroræ porrigere purpure,
Pro thure, ex humili pectore funde preces.*

These places be in the keeping of the Franciscans : and not less revered than Calvary, or the Sepulchre : visited also by the Mahometan Pilgrims. Where Lamps still burning, do expel the natural darkness, and give a greater state thereto than the light of the day could afford it. Baldwin the Second did honour this place with an Episcopal See (being before but a Priory) annexing therunto, together with the Church of Afcalon, many Towns and Villages. In the place where this City stood, there are now but a few poor Cottages standing. Most of the few Inhabitants Greeks and Armenians : who get a beggarly living by selling unto Strangers the Models of the Sepulchre, and of the Grot of the Nativity ; cut in Wood, or cast in Stone, with Crosses, and such like Merchandize ; and in being serviceable unto Pilgrims.

After dinner we descended afoot into the Valley which lyeth East of the City ; fruitful in Pasturage : where Jacob fed his flock (at this day called his field) near the Tower of Adæ. But more famous for the Apparition of the Angels, who there brought to the Shepherds the glad tidings of our Salvation. In the midst of the field, on the self-same place, as is supposed, and two miles distant from Bethlehem, Saint Helena erected a Church, and dedicated it to the Angels ; now, nothing but ruins. Returning from thence, and turning a little on the left hand, we came to the Village where those Shepherds dwelt, as yet so called. In the midst wherof there standeth a Well ; the fame, as the rumour goeth, that the Blessed Virgin desired to drink of, when the churlish Villagers refusing to draw her up water, it forthwith miraculously flowed to the brim, greedy to pass thorow her blessed lips, and facilit-

the

fi her longings. Of this the Arabs would not suffer us to drink before we had given them money. Nearer to Bethlehem, and at the foot of the Hill, are the ruins of a Chappel, where Joseph (as they say) had his dwelling at such time as the Angel commanded him to fly into Egypt. Near the top, and not far from the back of the Monastery, there is a Cave containing two Rooms, one within another, descended into by a narrow entrance, and in some places supported by Pillars. In this, it is said, that Joseph hid our Saviour and his Mother, whilst he prepared things necessary for his journey. The stone thereof pulveriz'd and often wash'd, of much a little will remain, not unlike to refined Chalk, which taken in drink, is said to have a sovereign virtue in restoring milk both to Women and Cattel; much used by the Moors themselves for that purpose. Over this stood one of the Nunneries built by Paula, not only shewing the foundation, and wherein she died. These places seen, we re-entred the Monastery, and there reposed our selves the night following.

Each of us bestowing a piece of Gold on the Vicar, betimes in the morning we departed, bending our course to the Mountains of Judæa, lying West from Bethlehem. Near to which, on the side of the opposite Hill, we pass'd by a little Village called, as I take it, Betee (inhabited only by Christians:) mortal (as they say) to the Mahometans that attempted to dwell therein. About two miles further we pass'd by Bethsai, seated in a bottom between two rocky Mountains; once a strong Fort: first built by Rehoboam, and after repaired by the Maccabees: famous for sundry Sieges; being in the upper way between Jerusalem and Gaza. Where we saw the ruins of an ample Church: below that a Fountain, not unbeholding to Art; whose pleasant Waters are forthwith drunk up by the earth that produced them. Here, they say, that Philip baptized the Eunuch; whereupon it retaineth the name of the Ethiopian Fountain. And no question but the adjoyning Temple was erected out of devotion to the honour of the place, and memory of the fact. Yet seemeth it strange to me, that a Chariot should be able to pass those rocky and declining Mountains, where almost a Horse can hardly keep footing. Having travelled about a mile and a half further, we came to the Cave

A The Desert.
B The Cave of S. John Baptist.

C The Fountain.
D The Ruines of the Monastery.

where John Baptist is said to have lived from the age of seven, until such time as he went unto the Wilderness by Jordan; sequestered from the abode of men, and feeding on such wild nourishment as these un-inhabited places afforded. This Cave is seated on

on the Northern-side of a Desert Mountain (only beholding to the Locust Tree) hewn out of the precipitating Rock; so as difficultly to be ascended or descended to: entered at the East corner, and receiving light from a Window in the side. At the upper end there is a Bench of the self same Rock, whereon (as they say) he accustomed to sleep; of which who so breaks a piece off, stands forth-with excommunicate. Over this, on a little flat, stand the ruins of a Monastery, on the South-side, naturally walled with the steep of a Mountain, from whence there gusherth a living Spring which enteth the Rock, and again bursteth forth beneath the mouth of the Cave; a place that would make solitariness delightful, and stand in comparison with the turbulent pomp of Cities. This over-looketh a profound Valley, on the far side hem'd with aspiring Mountains, whereof some are cut (or naturally so) in degrees like Allies, which would be else un-accessibly fruitless; whose levels yet bear the stumps of decayed Vines, shadowed not rarely with Olives and Locusts. And surely, I think that all or most of those Mountains have been to husbanded, else could this little Country have never sustained such a multitude of people. After we had fed of such provision as was brought us from the City, by other of the Fraternity that there met us, we turned towards Jerusalem, leaving the way of Bethlehem on the right hand, and that of Emmaus on the left. The first place of note that we met with was there where once stood the dwelling of Zachary; seated on the side of a fruitful

A. The Church of John Baptist. B. The Fountain. C. The house of Elizabeth.

Hill, well stored with Olives and Vineyards. Hither came the blessed Virgin to visit her Cousen Elizabeth. Here died Elizabeth, and here in a Grot on the side of a Vault or Chappel, lies buried; over which a goodly Church was erected, together with a Monastery, whereof now little standeth but a part of the Walls, which offer to the view some fragments of painting, which shew that the rest have been exquisite. Beyond, and lower, is our Ladies Fountain, (so called of the Inhabitants) which maintaineth a little current through the neighbouring Valley. Near this, in a bottom, and uttermost extent thereof, there standeth a Temple; once sumptuous, now desolate: built by Helena, and dedicated to S. John Baptist, in the place where Zachary had another house, where the Prophet was born in a Room hewn out of the Rock, of principal devotion with those Christians; possess, as the rest, by the beastly Arabians, who delie it with their Cattel, and employ it to the basest of uses. Transcending the less steep Hills, and passing through Vallies of their Rocks voluntarily plentiful, after awhile we came to a Monastery, seated in a Straight between two Rocky Mountains tains, environed with high Walls, and entred by a door of Iron, where a Bishop of the Georgians hath his residence, who courteously entertained us. Within they have a handsome Chappel, at the upper end an Altar, and under that a Pit, in which they say, that the Palm did grow (but rather, if any, the Olive, whereof that place hath store) of which a part of the Cross was made. For it was framed (as they report) of four several woods; the foot of Cedar, the bole of Cyprus, the tranfom of Palm, and the rinde of Olive. This is called thereupon, The Monastery of the holy Cross. Where, in stead of Bells, they strike on a hollow beam (as the Greeks do in the Temple of Golgotha) to summon their Assemblies. Between this and Jerusalem, we saw nothing worth noting, that hath not been spoken of already.

The day following, we went to review the remarkable places about the City, passing by the Castle of the Pisians, on the left hand entering at a little square passage, we shewed a small Chappel, the Door and Windows rammed up; for that (as they say) the Mahometans became mortally sick, that, though but by chance, did come into it: standing, where stood the Temple of St. Thomas. From hence we were brought to the Palace of Annas, destroyed by the Seditious in the time of the Siege, where now standeth a Church dedicated to the blessed Angels, and belonging to the Armenians, who have their dwellings about it. Within the Court there is an old Olive-tree, environed with a low Wall, unto which, it is said, that they bound our Saviour. Turning on the right hand, we went out at the Port of Sion. South, and not far from thence,

- A. A Mosque, where once stood the Conaculum.
 B. The Church of S. Saviour, where stood the house of Caiaphas.
 C. Where the Jews would have taken away the body of the Virgin Mary from the Apostles.
 D. Where Peter wept.
 E. Port Esquiline.
 F. The Pool and Fountain of Silve.
 G. Where the Oak Rogel stood.
 H. The Church of the purification of the blessed Virgin.

- I. The Fountain of the blessed Virgin.
 K. The Bridge that passeth over Cedron, with the Rock that bears the impression, as they say, of Christ's footstep.
 L. The Field of Blood.
 M. Where certain of the Apostles hid themselves.
 N. The Mountain of offence.
 O. Where the house of Annas the High Priest stood.
 P. Where the Franks are buried.
 Q. Port Sion.

on the midst of the Mount, is the place, as they say, where Christ did eat his last Supper; where also, after his Resurrection, the doors being shut, he appeared to his Apostles, where they received the Holy Ghost; where Peter converted three thousand; and where, as they say also, they held the first Council, in which the Apostles Creed was decreed. Here Helena built a most sumptuous Temple, including therein the Conaculum; where that Marble Pillar was preserved that stood before before in the Palace of Pilate, to which they tied our Saviour when they whipped him. This Church subverted by the Saracens, in the self-same place, the Franciscans had a Monastery erected, who in the year 1561. were removed by the Turks: they building here a Mosque of their own, into which no Christian is permitted to enter. Yet not in the respects aforesaid, so revered by the Infidels, but in that it is delivered by Tradition, (and not unlike) that David had there his Sepulchre. His Monument was enriched with a mass of Treasure, out of which Hircanus, 850 years after, took three thousand Talents, to divert the War which was threatened by Antiochus. Herod, with unlike success, attempted the like. For having already taken out a great sum, and perishing in his sacrilege, a flame of Fire brake out of the Tomb, and consumed divers of his Instruments. In expiation whereof, he adorned the same with a stately Monument, which stood intire for a long time after. Between this and the walls of the City, the Franks have their burial; where lie six English-men, (sent, as may be suspected) unto their long-homes not many years since, though coloured by the Franciscans, in whose Monastery they lay, with pretence of Divine vengeance, for the supposed murder of their Droghda. Seven they were in all, all alive, and well in one day, six dead in the other; the out-liver, becoming a Convert to their Religion. Turning a little on the left hand we came to a small Church, enclosed within a square wall, arched within with a wall on the top, in manner of a Cave; the habitation of their Armenians, who have of this Church the custody. Here flourished the proud Palace of Caiaphas, in which our Saviour was buffeted, spit upon, and so spitefully reviled. Here Helena built a fair Church to Saint Peter; but that destroyed, in the room thereof, this less was erected, and dedicated to Saint Saviour. On the right hand, in the Court, they undertook to shew where the Fire was made, by which Peter stood, when he denied his Master: and at the side of the Church door, the Chapter of a Pillar, whereon the Cock crowing, did move him to contrition. At the upper end of the Church, upon a large Altar, lieth a stone, that (as they say) which was rolled against the mouth of the Sepulchre. From hence we descended into the Valley of Gebinnon, which divideth Mount Sion, from the Mountain of Offence; so called, for that Solomon, by the perswasion of his Wives, here sacrificed to Chamoth, and Molech; but now by these Christians, called, The Mountain of Ill-counsel, where, they say, the Pharisees took counsel against Jesus: whose height yet shews the reliques of no mean buildings. This Valley is but straight, now serving for little use; heretofore most delightful, planted with Groves, and watered with Fountains; wherein the Hebrews sacrificed their Children to Molech; an Idol of Brass, having the head of a Calf, the rest of a Kingly Figure, with arms extended to receive the miserable sacrifice, feared to death with his burning embracements. For the Idol was hollow within, and filled with fire. And left their lamentable shrieks, should sad the hearts of their Parents, the Priests of Molech, did deaf their ears with the continual clangs of Trumpets and Timbrels; whereupon it was called the Valley of Tophet. But the good Josias brake the Idol in pieces, hewed down the Groves, and ordained that that place (before a Paradise) should be, for ever, a receptacle for dead carcases, and the filth of the City. Gebenna, for the impiety committed therein, is used for Hell, by our Saviour. On the South-side of this Valley, near where it meeteth the Valley of Jehosaphat, mounted a good height, on the side of the Mountain, is Aeldama, or Field of Blood, purchased with the restored reward of Treason, for a Burial place for Strangers. In the midst whereof, a large square Room was made by the Mother of Constantine: the South-side walled with the natural Rock; flat at the top, and equal with the upper level, out of which arise certain little Cupules, open in the midst, to let down the dead bodies. Through these we might see the bottom all covered with Bones, and certain Coarces but newly let down, it being now the Sepulchre of the Armenians. A greedy Grave, and great enough to devour the dead of a whole Nation. For, they say (and I believe it) that the earth thereof, within the space of eight and forty hours, will consume the flesh that is laid thereon. The like is said of St. Innocent's Church-yard in Paris; and he that sees the multitude of bones that are there piled about it, the daily burials (it being a general receptacle for Strangers) and finalness of the circuit, may be easily induced to credit it. And why might not the earth be transported from hence, as well as that at Rome, in Campo Sancto, brought thither in 270 Ships, by the commandment of the aforesaid Empress? which, though changing soyls, retaineth her virtue; it being also a place of burial for Foreigners. In the Rock about there are divers Sepulchres, and

A. The place of the Synagoga.
B. Of the Oak Roguel.
C. Where the Apostles did hide themselves.
D. The Field of Blood.

E. The Mountain of Offence.
F. Part of the Valley of Jehosaphat.
G. Part of the Valley of Gehinnom.

and some in use at this day, having great stones rolled against their mouths, according to the ancient custom. Beyond, on the point of the Hill, a Cave hewn out of the Rock, consisting of several Rooms, is said to have hidden six of the Apostles in the time of Christ's Passion. First, made without doubt for a Sepulchre, and after serving for an Hermitage; the Roof of the larger Room retaining some shew of building. Below, where the Valley of Gehinnom and Jehosaphat, like conjoining streams, do tend to the South, there is a dry Pit, where the Priests are said to have hid the sacred Fire, when the Jews were carried captive into Babylon; and seeking it after their return, did find it converted into Water. But Nebemiah caused it to be sprinkled on the Altar, when forth-with, with the beams of the Sun, it miraculously flamed. This Valley of Jehosaphat (so called of that good King) from hence extendeth full North, and then inclineth a little to the West, first presenting (though Natural) no other than a large dry Ditch to the East of the City, contracted between it and the over-pearing Hills of the opposite Olives. It is said to be about two miles long, and if to but short ones; where broadest fruitful: watered by the Torrent Cedron, which runneth no longer than fed with showers, losing his intermittent streams in the Lake of Asphaltic. It was also called the Valley of Cedron, and of the King; where the general Judgment shall be, if the Jews or Latines may be believed, who ground their opinions upon the Prophecy of Joel, which I will not gain-say, since some of our Divines, have of late, so laboured to approve it. Of the same opinion are the Mahometans. In the Wall about it there is a Window, not far from the Golden Gate, where they say that Mahomet shall sit whilst Christ doth execute Justice. Passing to the City-side of the Valley, at the foot of the Hill, and East of the South-East corner, is the place where the Prophet Isaiah was slain asunder, by the commandment of Manasses his Grand-child by the Mother, and there buried; where there is a little pavement used for a place of prayer by the Mahometans. Close below this stood the Oak Roguel, where now a white Mulberry is chequered. North of it, in a gut of the Hill (above which, in the wall, stood the Tower) was the Fifth-pool of Siloe, containing not above half an Acre of Ground, now dry in the bottom; and beyond the Fountain that fed it, now no other than a little Trench walked in on the sides, full of filthy water, whose upper part is obscured by a building (as I take take it, a Mosque) where once flourished a Christian Church, there built by Saint Helena. Though deprived of those her salubrious streams, yet is she held in honour for their former virtues. Passing along, we came to our Ladies Fountain (upon what occasion they so call it, is not worth the relating) in a deep Cave of the Rock, descended into by a large pair of stairs, and replenished with pleasant waters. Here the Valley streightneth, and a little beyond is no broader than serves for a Chancel to the Torrent. On the other side stands the Sepulchre of Zachary, who was slain between the Temple and the Altar; all of the natural Rock, eighteen foot high, four square, and beautified with Dorick Columns of the same unpeparated stone sustain-

A. A part of the Pillar of Absalom.
B. The Cave of S. James.

C. The Sepulchre of Zachary.
D. The Torrent Cedron.

ing the Cornish, and topt like a pointed Diamond. Close to this there is another in the upright Rock; the front like the side of an open Gallery, supported with Marble Pillars, now between rammed up with stones. Within is a Grot, whither James retired (as they say) after the Passion of our Saviour, with purpose never to have received sustenance, until he had seen him, who in that place appeared unto him after his Resurrection. In memorial whereof, the Christians erected a Church hard by, whose ruins are now ruined. A little farther, there is a stone Bridge of one Arch, which passeth the Torrent. In a Rock, at the foot thereof, there are certain impressions, made (as they say) by our Saviour's feet, when they led him thorow the water. At the East-end of this Bridge, and a little on the North, stands the Pillar of Absalom, which he here erected in his life-time, to retain the memory of his name, in that his issue male failed (but he was not buried therein) being yet intire, and of a good Fabric, rising in a lofty square; below adorned with half Columns, wrought out of the sides and corners of the Dorick form; and then changing into a round, a good height higher doth grow to a point in fashion of a Bell, all framed of the growing stone. Against this there lieth a great heap of stones, which increaseth daily. For both Jews and Mahometans passing by, do throw stones against it, yet execrating Absalom for his rebellion against David. Adjoining there is a large square, but lower by far, which hath an entrance like the Frontispiece of a Porch, cut curiously without, the earth almost reaching to the top of the entrance, having a Grot within hewn out of the Rock: some say, a Kingly Sepulchre, perhaps appertaining to the former. A little more North, and up the Torrent, at the foot of Olives, once stood the Village Gethsemane; the place yet fruitful in Olives: and hard by the delightful

- A The golden Gate of the Temple.
B The Gate of S. Steven.
C Where S. Steven was stoned to death.
D The Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin.
E The Garden of Mount Olivet.

- F The Torrent of Cedron.
G The Bridge of the Torrent.
H Sepulchres of the Mahometans.
I Where Thomas stood, as they will have it, when the Blessed Virgin let fall her Girdle.

Garden wherein our Saviour was betrayed. They point at the place where he left two of his Disciples, and a little higher the third, when he went to pray; and withal the place where he was taken. In this Garden there is also a stone, whereon they lay that our Lady late; and beheld the Martyrdom of S. Steven, who suffered on the side of the opposite Hill. Without the said Garden, in the joining of two ways, they shewed us the place, as they will have it, where S. Thomas stood, when incredulous, forsooth, of our Ladies Assumption, the let fall her Girdle to inform his belief.

And now are we come to the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin, made thus, as it is, by the Mother of Constantine. Before it a Court; the building above ground a Square Pile only, flat at the top, and neatly wrought, like the largest Portico to a Temple. You enter at the South-side, and forthwith descend by a goodly pair of stairs of fifty steps. About the middle of the descent are two small opposite Chapels; in that on the right hand, are the Sepulchres of Josacim and Anna; in that on the left, of Joseph, the Parent and Spouse of the Mother of Jesus. The stairs do lead you into a spacious Church, stretching East and West, walled on each side, and arched above with the natural Rock. Upon the right hand, in the midst, there is a little square Chappel, framed of the eminent Rock, but flagged both within and without with white Marble, and entered at two doors. At the far side thereof stands her Tomb; which taketh up more than the third part of the Room; is now in form of an Altar, under which (they say) that she was decently buried by the Apostles, and the third day after assumed into Heaven by the Angels. In this there burn eighteen Lamps continually; partly maintained by the Christians, and partly by the Mahometans: who have this Palace in an especial veneration. Near the East semicircle of the Church, there standeth a great Altar (over which the little Light that this dark place hath, doth descend by a Cupole:) near the West another, but both unfinished: and by the former, a Well of an excellent water. In a canton of the Wall, right against the North-end of the Sepulchre, there is a cliff in the Rock, where the Turks do affirm that our Lady did hide her self, when she was persecuted by the Jews into which I have seen their Women to creep, and give the cold Rock affectionate kisses. The opposite Canton is also used for an Oratory, by the Mahometans, who have the keeping of the whole, and will not suffer us to enter of free cost. Remounting the same stairs, not far off on the left hand, towards the East, and not above a stones cast from the Garden of Gethsemane, a straight passage descendeth into

- A The entrance and building above ground of the Church of the Sepulchre of the blessed Virgin.
B The place from whence it receiveth light.
C The entrance of the Oratory of Christ.

- D The place from whence it receiveth light.
AA Where Christ prayed.
BB Where the Angels stood.

into a vast round Cave; all of the natural Rock, the Roof confirmed with Arches of the same, receiving a dim light from a little hole in the top, which was, in times past, all over curiously painted; The place (they say) where Christ did pray, when in that bloody agony he was comforted by the Angels. From hence we bent our course to the City. High on the Hill, where three ways meet, and upon the flat of a Rock, is the place where S. Stephen (who bore the first Palm of Martyrdom) was stoned to death. The Stones thereabout have a red rull on them, which, they say, give testimony of his blood-shed. A little above, we entered the City at the Gate of S. Stephen (where on each side a Lyon retrograde doth stand) called in times past, The port of the Valley, and of the Flock; for that the Cattel came in at this Gate, which were to be sacrificed in the Temple, and were sold in the Marker place adjoining. On the left hand there is a Stone Bridge, which passeth at the East end of the North wall into the Court of the Temple of Solomon: the head to the Pool Bethesda (underneath which it had a conveyance) called also Præbaticum, for that the Sacrifices were therein washed ere delivered to the Priests. It had five Ports built thereto by Solomon; in which continually lay a number of diseased persons. For an Angel, at certain seasons troubled the water; and he that could next descend thereto, was perfectly cured. Now it is a great square profundity, green, and uneven at the bottom; into which a barren Spring doth drill, from between the Stones of the North-ward wall, and stealeth away almost undiscovered. The place is for a good depth hewn out of the Rock; confined above, on the North-side, with a steep Wall; on the West, with high buildings (perhaps a part of the Cattle of Antonia, where are two doors to descend by, now all, that are half choked with rubbish) and on the South, with the wall of the Court of the Temple. Whereof it is fit that something be spoken by us, although not suffered to enter without the forfeiture of our lives, or renouncing of our Religion.

I will not speak of the former form and magnificency thereof, by sacred Pens so exactly described. First, built by Solomon, destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, redeemed by Zorobabel, (yet so far short of the first in glory, that thole wept to behold it, who had beheld the former;) new built, or rather sumptuously repaired by Herod, the Great; and lastly, utterly subverted by Titus. The Jews assayed to re-near which a house ascended by certain steps; the place where Veronica dwelt, who gave our Saviour, as they say, a Napkin as he passed by the door, to cleanse his face from the blood which trickled from his thorn-pierced brows; and spittle wherewith they had despitely defiled him: who returned it again enriched with his lively counterfeits; now to be seen at Rome upon Festival days, in St. Peter's Church in the Vatican. To which this Hymn was made, and published by Pope John the two and twentieth, with a grant of seven years indulgency to him that should devoutly utter it to that Picture.

Salve sancta facies nostri Redemptoris,
In qua nict species divini splendoris,
Impressa Panniculo nivei candidioris;
Dataque Veronica signum ob amoris.

Salve decus seculi, speculum sanctorum;
Quod videre cupiunt spiritus coelorum:
Nos ab omni macula purga vitiorum,
Atque nos consortio iunge beatorum.

Salve vultus Domini, imago beata,
Ex aeterno munere mite decorata;
Lumen sancte cordibus ex vi tibi data,
Et à nostra sensibus tolle colligata.

Salve robur fidei nostrae Christianae,
Destituta haereticis qui sunt mentis vanae,
Horum auge merum qui te credunt fane,
Illius effuge qui Rex sit ex pane.

Salve nostrum gaudium in hac vita dura,
Labili, & fragili; cito peritura,
Nos deduc ad propria & felix figura,
Ad videndam faciem quae est Christi pura.

Of our Redeemer, hail, O Face divine,
Wherein the beams of heavenly beauty shine:
Fix'd in a Napkin, white as snow new driven;
And to Veronica (thy loves pledge) given.

Hail worlds renown, of Saints the mirror bright,
Whose desired view would heaven's thrond's spirit delight,
Purge us from stains which sinning souls infect,
And join to blest communion of th' elect.

Hail our Lords visage, happy counterfeits,
By gift eternal made wondrously compleats;
Our hearts illuminate with grace assign'd:
And our thrall'd senses by thy power unbind.

Of Christians faith, hail force, and fortress sure,
Destroying Heretics, of minds impure:
Augment their merits that in thee do trust,
By his dear image made a God of trust.

Hail comfort of sad life, the only one,
Life tedious, brittle, sickle, and soon gone,
Lead to thine own, O happy Portraiture,
To see the face of Christ, the face so pure.

Fronting the far end of this Street, an ancient Gate which stood in the West wall of the old City, yet resists the subversions of time: called by Nebemias, The old Gate; by the Jehusites, the Port of Jesus, and the Gate of Judgment; for that the Elders there fate in Justice: through which the condemned were led to execution unto Mount Calvary, then two hundred and twenty paces without, and a little on the left hand; though now almost in the heart of the City. From hence we ascended the East-side of Mount Calvary (eight hundred paces from the Palace of Pilate) and so descended into the Court of the Temple of the Sepulchre. Right against it are the ruins of lofty buildings, heretofore the Alberges of the Knight Hospitallers of St. Johns. Turning to the South, we were shewed where once stood the dwelling of Zabedee, in which James and John were born, heretofore a Collegiate Church, but now a Mosque. A little higher we came to the Iron-Gate, a passage in times past between the upper City and the nether (which gave way unto Peter conducted by the Angel) built by Alexander the Great. Who having taken Tyrrus and the Sea-bordering Cities of Phoenicia and Palästina, begirt Jerusalem with his Army; when on a sudden the Gates were set open, Jaddus the High Priest issuing forth, clothed in his Pontifical Habit, and followed with a long train in white Rayments; whom Alexander elying, advanced before the rest of the company; and when he drew near, fell prostrate before him. For it came unto his remembrance, how once in Dio a City of Macedon, consulting with himself about his Affair enterprise, he had seen in a Vision one so apparelled, who bid him boldly proceed, and told him, that the God whom he served would protect his Army, and make him Lord of the Persian Monarchy. Then hand in hand they entered the City, the High Priest conducting him unto the Temple, where he sacrificed unto God according to the manner of the Hebrews: Jaddus expounding unto him the Prophecies of Daniel, which foretold of his Victories. From thence we proceeded unto the House of Saint Mark, of which an obscure Church in the custody of the Sorians, doth retain the memory. And beyond we came to the Church of Saint James, standing in the place where he was beheaded; erected by the Spaniards, together with an Hospital, and now posselt by the Armenians. This seen, we returned to the Covenant.

The day following, we went out (as before) at the Port of Sion. Turning on the left left hand along the Wall, we were shewed the place where Peter wept, when he had denied our Saviour; dignified once with a Church, and whereof there now remaineth some part of the foundation. Right against it, there is a Postern in the Wall, formerly called Port Esguiline; at which they bore forth the filth of the City. The foundation of this part of the Wall is much more ancient, and much more strong than the rest; consisting of black stones of a mighty size. Not far beyond we crossed the Valley of Jehosaphat, and mounted the South-end of Mount Olivet, by the way of Bethania. Having ascended a good height, on the right hand they shewed us where Judas hanged himself (the stump of the Sycamore, as they say, not long since extant) being buried in a Grot that adjoineth; nearer the top where Christ curled the Fig-tree, many there growing at this present. Descending the East side of the Mountain, a little on the left hand, we came to a desolate Chappel,

- A Mount Olivet.
- B Bethphage.
- C The Fountain of the Apostles.
- D Where the House of Mary stood.
- E The Stone wheron Christ sat.
- F Where the House of Mary stood.

- G The Sepulchre of Lazarus.
- H The House of Lazarus.
- I The House of Simon the Leper.
- K The Valley of the cursed Fig tree.
- L The way of Jerusalem.
- M Quarantania.

about which were divers ruins, the house heretofore of Simon the Leper. From thence we descended into the Castle of Lazarus (whereof yet there is something extant) the Brother to Mary and Martha. Close under which lies Bethania (two miles from Jerusalem) now a tottered Village, inhabited by Arabs. In it the Vault where Christ raised Lazarus from death; square and deep, descended into by certain steps. Above are two little Chappels, which have in either of them an Altar, where stood a stately Church erected by Saint Helena: and after that an Abbey, Queen Millisent the Foundress. A little North of Bethania, we came to the ruins of a Monastery, now level with the floor, seated in the place unto which the penitent Mary retired from the corrupting vanities of the City. Southward of this, and not far off, stood the house of Martha, honoured likewise with a Temple, and ruined; alike equally distant from both, there is a stone, whercon, they say, that our Saviour sat, when the two Sisters intreated him to restore life to their Brother, now four days buried. The Pilgrim that breaks off a piece thereof stands excommunicated. A little above there is a Fountain of excellent water, deep sunk into the Rock, (by which we refreshed our selves with provision brought with us) called the Fountain of the Apostles. Now we ascended Mount Olivet again, by another way more inclining to the North. Upon the right hand, and not far from the top, stood Bethphage, whole whose very foundations are now confounded; from whence Christ pass unto Jerusalem in Triumph upon an Asses Colt; every Palm-Sunday by the Easter-guardian superstitiously imitated.

Here we look back, and for a while survey the high Mountain Quarantania, the low Plains of Jericho, Jordan, and the Dead-Sea; which we could not go to, by reason of our tardy arrival, the Pilgrims returning on the self-same day that we came unto Jerusalem. A Journey undertaken but once a year, in regard of the charge, the Passengers being then guarded by a Sheek of the Arabians, to resist the wild Arabs, who almost famished on those barren Mountains (which they dare not husband for fear of surprisal) rob all that pass, if inferior in strength. Yet paid we towards that conduct, two Dollars apiece to the Sanziak. I have spoken before of the River and Lake that devoureth it, as much as here heard, and what I have read, that dissenteth not: the rest being such like stuff as the former, wherewith I have already tired my self, and afflicted my Reader. I will therefore forbear to deliver a particular report of that three days Pilgrimage, only thus much in general. Jordan runneth well-nigh thirty miles from Jerusalem, the way thither by Bethania, made long and troublesome by the steep descents and labyrinthian windings; being, to the judgment of the eye, not the fourth part of that distance. In this the Pilgrims wash themselves, and bring from thence of the water, sovereign (as they say) for sundry Diseases. A great way on this side the River, there stands a ruined Temple upon the winding of a crooked Chancel, forsaken by the fire, (or then not filled but by inundations) where Christ (as they say) was baptized by John. On the right hand stood Jericho, (a City of fame) and in the time of the Christians an Episco-

- A Where Christ ascended into Heaven.
- B The Cell of Pelagia.
- C Where Christ Spoke of the general Judgment.
- D Where, they say, he taught the Lords Prayer.
- E Where the Apostles made the Creed.
- F Where Christ wept over the City.
- G Where the Blessed Virgin reposed.
- H Where the Angel said, Thou men of Galilee, &c.
- I Where St. Thomas, as they say, took up the Blessed Virgins Girdle.
- K Where the Blessed Virgin sate, and beheld the Marydom of St. Steven.
- L Where Christ left the three Disciples.

- M Where he was taken.
- N The Coverture of Christs Oratory.
- O Gethsemane.
- P The Sepulchre of the Virgin Mary.
- Q Where Judas hanged himself.
- R The Pillar of Absalom.
- S The Bridge that passeth over Cedron.
- T Sepulchres.
- V The Valley of the cursed Fig tree.
- X The way to Bethania.
- Y The way to Jerusalem.
- Z The Torment Cedron.
- R The Garden of Gethsemane.

pill

pal See) beautiful in her Palms, but chiefly proud of her Balsamm: a Plant then only thought particular unto Jury, which grew most plentifully in this Valley, and on the sides of the Western Mountains which confine it, being about two cubits high, growing upright, and yearly pruned of her superfluous branches. In the Summer they lanced the rind with a stone, (not to be touched with steel) but not deeper than the inward film; for otherwise it forthwith perished: from whence those fragrant and precious tears did distill, which now are only brought us from India; but they far worse, and generally sophisticated. The hole of this Shrub is of the least esteem, the rind of greater, the seed exceeding that, but the liquor of greatest, known to be right in the curdling of milk, and not staining of garments. Here remained two Orchards thereof in the days of Vespasian: in defence of which, a battel was fought with the Jews, that endeavoured to destroy them. Of such repute with the Romans, that Pompey first, and afterwards Titus, did present it in their triumphs as an especial glory; now utterly lost through the barbarous waste, and neglect of the Mahometans. Where Jericho stood, there stand a few poor Cottages inhabited by the Arabians. The Valley, about ten miles over, now producing but a spiny grass, is bordered on the East with the high Arabian Mountains, on the West with those of Jury. Amongst which, Quarantania is the most eminent, being in that Wilderness where Christ for forty days was tempted by the Devil: so high, that few dare attempt to ascend to the top, from whence the Tempter shewed him the Kingdoms of the Earth, now crowned with a Chappel, which is yet unruined. There is, besides, in the side an Hermitage, with a Cistern to receive Rain-water; and another Grot, wherein the Hermits were buried. Here St. Jerom (as they say) fulfilled his four years penance.

But now return we to the summit of Mount Olives, which over-toppeth the neighbouring Mountains; whose West-side doth give you a full survey of each particular part of the City, bedeck'd with Olives, Almonds, Fig-trees, and heretofore with Palms; pleasantly rich when husbanded, and now upbraiding the barbarous with his neglected pregnancy. So famous in sacred Histories, and so often blest with the presence of Christ, and apparition of Angels. It is not much less than a mile in height, stretching from North to South, and having three heads. On the middlemost (and that the highest) there standeth a little Chappel, of an eight-square round, at every corner a Pillar, mounted on three degrees; being all of white Marble, and of an elegant

- A. The Chapel of Ascension.
- B. The Cell of Pelagia.

- C. The Ruins of the Monastery.
- D. The entrance.

structure

structure. Within it is not above twelve foot over; paved with the natural Rock, which beareth the impression of a foot-step, they say, of our Saviour; the last that he set upon earth, when from thence he ascended into Heaven. A place in honour inferior unto none; frequented by Christians, possed by Mahometans, yet free to both their devotions. Built it was by the Mother of Constantine, and covered like the Sepulchre, with a sumptuous Temple (whose ruins yet look aloft) together with a Monastery, on the South-side of which, they shewed us the Cell of Pelagia; a famous, rich, and beautiful Courtizan of Antioch; who converted by the Bishop of Damietta, retired hither unknown; and here long lived in the habit and penury of an Hermit, being not, till dead, discovered for a woman. Descending, we were shewed by the way, where our Saviour taught them the Pater Noster, where he foretold of the destruction of Jerusalem, where the Apostles made the Creed, where he wept over the City, (a paved square, now a Mahometan Oratory) and such like traditions, not much worthy the mentioning. So crossing the Valley by the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin, we entered the City at the Gate of St. Stephen, returning the same way (as the day before) to the Monastery.

Much of the day, and all the night following we spent in the Church of the Sepulchre, they then concluding the ceremonies and solemnities of that Festival. The next day we prepared for our departure. We agreed with certain Mucessmen (so call they their Muliters) of Aleppo (who had brought a Portugal hither, with his Janizary, and Interpreter, then newly come from India) to carry us unto Tripoly, and defray all charges (our diet excepted) for twenty six Dollars a man, and for half so much if we went but to Acre; greatly to the displeasure of Atala the Drogman, that would not undertake our convoy under a great sum; who found a time to affect his malice; yet his little pains were rewarded with four Dollars. Caphar and As-hire about the Country had cost us six Sultanies. We gave money to the Friar-servants, and that not niggardly, considering our light purses, and long journey; whereof the Pater-guardian particularly inquired, lest their vow of poverty they should covetously infringe (or rather, perhaps, defraud his desire) by retaining what was given to their private uses. A crime with excommunication punished; yet that less feared, I suppose, than detection. They use to mark the Arms of Pilgrims with the names of Jesus, Maria, Jerusalem, Belehem, the Jerusalem Cross, and sundry other characters, done in such manner as hath been declared before. The Pater-guardian would needs thrust upon us several

A. A Fountain. B. Mount Olivet. C. Sepulchre. D. A Mosque. E. Silo.

Certi-

Certificates, which returned him as many Zebibies. He desired that he would make their poverty known, with the dignity of those sanctified places, as a motive to relief, and more frequent Pilgrimages.

Leaving behind those friendly Italians that accompanied us from Cairo, (being now also upon their return) on the first of April we departed from Jerusalem, in the company of that Apothecary (now Knight of the Sepulchre) and the Portugal before-mentioned, together with an Alman and a French-man; all bound for Tripoly. We returned by the way which we strayed from in our coming, less difficult to pass; the Mountains more pleasant and fruitful. Near the City there are many Sepulchres and places of ruins, here and there dispersed. On the right hand, and in sight, is Silo, of a long time a station for the Ark of the Covenant, the highest Mountain of Jury, which beareth on the top some fragments of a City; North of it, on another, were the remains of that Rama Sophim (with more likelihood of truth than the other) which was the habitation of Samuel; whose bones are said to have been translated unto Constantinople, by the Emperor Arcadius. After four miles riding, we descended into the Valley of Teberinib; famous, though little, for the slaughter of Goliath. A Bridge here crosseth the Torrent, near which are the ruins of an ancient Monastery; more worthy the observing for the greatness of the stones, than fineness of the workmanship. Having rid four miles further, they shewed us Modin, the ancient Seat of the Maccabees; towards the North, and seated on the top of an aspiring Hill, which yet supporteth the reliques of a City, whereof there hath something been spoken already. Beyond, by the highway side there is another Monastery, not altogether subverted: of late inhabited by some of the Franciscans; who best one night by the Arabs, and not able to master their terror, quitted it the day following. About a stones cast off, there standeth a Church now desolate; yet retaining the name of the Prophet Jeremy. But whether here stood that Anathoth, or no, that challengeth his birth, I am ignorant. About three miles further, we passed by a place called Sereb; where, by certain ruins, there standeth a Pile like a broken Tower, engraven with Turkish Characters, upon that side which regardeth the way; erected, as they say, by an Ottoman Emperor. Now, having for a while descended those Mountains that neighbour the Champion, we came to the ruins of an ancient Building, over-looking the level, yet no less excelling in commodious situation, than delicacy of prospect. They call it, The house of the Good Thief. Perhaps some Abbey erected in that place, or Castle here built to defend this passage. Upon the right hand there standeth a handsome Mosque, every way open, and supported with Pillars, the Roof flat, and charged on the East-end with a Cupolo, heretofore a Christian Chappel. This is ten miles from Rama, whither we came that night; and wet as we were, took up our Lodgings on the ground in the house of Sion, nothing that day befalling, save the violence done us by certain Sophies, who took our Wine from us, and payments of Head-money in sundry places, which was unto us neither chargeable nor troublesome.

Not until noon next day departed we from Rama, travelling through a most fruitful Valley. The first place we passed by was Lydda, made famous by St. Peter; called after Diopsolis, that is, the City of Jupiter, and destroyed by Cytius. Here yet standeth a Christian Temple, built, as they say, by a King of England, to the honour of St. George, a Cappadocian by birth, advanced in the Wars to the Dignity of a Tribune; who after became a Souldier of Christ, and here is said to have suffered Martyrdom under Dioclesian. Others say, that there never was such a man, and that the story is no other than an Allegory. The Greeks have the custody of this Church, who shew a Skull, which they affirm to be Saint Georges. In the time of the Christians it was the seat of a Suffragan, now hardly a Village. Eight miles from Rama stands the Castle Angia, built like a Cane, and kept by a small Garrison. A little beyond, the Mucessmen would have stayed (which we would not suffer, being then the best time of the day for travel) that they might by night have avoided the next Village, with the payments there due; where we were hardly intreated by the procurement of Atala, who holds correspondence with the Mors of those Quarters. They would not take less than four Dollars a man (when perhaps as many Madins were but due) and that with much jangling. They sought occasion how to trouble us, beating us off our Mules, because, forsooth, we did not light to do Homage to a sort of half-clad Rascals, pulling the white Shafr from the head of the Portugal (whereby he well hoped to have paid for a Turk) his Janizary looking on. Here they detained us until two of the clock the next morning, without meat, without sleep, couched on the wet earth, and washed with rain, yet expecting worse, and then suffered us to depart. After a while we entered a goodly Forest, full of tall and delightful Trees, intermixed with fruitful and flowry Lawns. Perhaps the earth affordeth not the like, it cannot a more pleasant. Having passed this part of the Wood (the rest inclining to the West, and then again extending to the North) we might discover a number of straggling Tents; some just in our way, and near to the skirts of the Forest. These were Saphis belonging to the Host of Morat Bassa, then in the Confiners of Perfia. They will take (especially from a Christian) whatsoever they like; and kindly they use him, if he pass without blows: nor are their Commanders at all times free from their infolencies. To avoid them, we struck out of the way, and crossed the pregnant Champaign to the foot of the Mountains, where, for that day, we rested our selves. When it grew dark we arose, inclining on the left hand, and mingling after it a while with a small Caravan of Moors, we were enjoined to silence, and to ride without our Hats, lest we should be discovered for Christians. The Clouds fell down in streams, and the pitchy night had bereft us of the conduct of our eyes, had not the Lightning afforded a terrible light. And when the rain intermitted, the Air appeared as if full of sparkles of fire, born to and fro with the wind; by reason of the infinite swarms of Flies that do shine like Glow-worms; to a Stranger a strange spectacle. In the next Wood we outstript that Caravan, where the thievish Arabs had made sundry fires, to which our Foot-men drew near to listen, that we might pass more securely. An hour after midnight, the Sky began to clear; when, on the other side of the Wood, we tell amongst certain Tents of Saphis; by whom we past with as little noise as we could, secured by their sounder sleepings. Not far beyond, through a large Glade, between two Hills we leisurely defended for the space of two hours (a Torrent rushing down on the left hand of us) when not able longer to keep the backs of our Mules; we laid us down in the bottom, under a plump of Trees on the far-side of a Torrent. With the Sun we arose, and found our selves at the East-end and North-side of Mount Carmel.

Mount Carmel stretcheth from East to West, and hath his uttermost Basis washed with the Sea, steepeth towards the North, and of an indifferent altitude; rich in Olives and Vines when husbanded; and abounding with several sorts of Fruits and Herbs, both medicinable and fragrant; though now much over-grown with Woods and Shrubs of sweet flavour. Celebrated it was for the habitation of Elias; whose house was after his death converted into a Synagogue; where Oracles, it is said, were given by God; called by Suetonius, The God Carmelius; whose words are these, intreating of Vespasian: In Judea, consulting with the Oracle of the God Carmelius, the Oracle assured him, that whatsoever he undertook, should be successful. Where then was nothing more to be seen than an Altar. From hence proceeded the Order of the Fryar Carmelites, as Successor to the Children of the Prophets there left by Elias. Who had their beginning in the Desert of Syria, in the year 1180. instituted by Americus Bishop of Antioch; and said to have received their white habit from our Lady; whom Albertus the Patriarch of Jerusalem transported first into Europe. There is yet to be seen the remains of their Monastery, with a Temple dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; under which a little Chappel or Cave, the ancient Dwelling of Elias. This is inherited by Achmet, an Emir of the Arabians, who, after the ancient custom of that Nation, doth live in Tents, even during the Winter, although possess of sundry convenient houses; whose Signiory stretcheth to the South; and along the Shore. Within his Precinct stands the Cattle of the Persegrines, upon a Cape almost environed with the Sea, now called Tortora; built by Raimond Earl of Polisy, for their better security; and after fortified by the Templars. Ten miles South of this stood that famous Cesarea (more anciently called, The Tower of Straton, of a King of Aradus, the Builder, so named; who lived in the days of Alexander) in such sort re-edified by Herod, that it little declined in Magnificency from the principal Cities of Asia; now level with the floor, the Haven lost, and Situation abandoned.

We passed the Torrent Chifon, which floweth from the Mountains of Tabor and Hermon; and gliding by the North skirts of Carmel, dischargeth it self into the Sea. Carmel is the South bound to the ample Valley of Acre; bounded on the North by thole of Saron, on the West it hath the Sea, and is inclosed on the East with the Mountains of Galilee. In length about fourteen miles, in breadth about half half as much; the nearer the Sea, the more barren. In it there arose two Rivulets of living, but pestilent waters drilling from several Marishes. The first is the River of basin, called by Pliny, Pagida and Palus, and Badia by Sinonites; whose sand affordeth matter for glais, becoming fusible with the heat of the Furnace. Strabo reports the like of divers places thereabout. And Josaphus speaking of this, declareth, that adjoining thereunto, there is a Pit an hundred cubits in circuit, covered with sand like glais, and when carried away (for therewith they accustomed to ballance their Ships) it forthwith filled again; born thither by winds from places adjacent; and moreover, that whatsoever Mineral was contained therein converted into glais; and glais there laid, again into sand. Near to this Pit stood the Sepulchre of Memnon the Son of Tyrbonus (who was Brother unto Priamus, and reigned in Susa, a City of Perfia, by him founded) his Mother was called Cissa, (though tignied to have been begotten on Aurora, in regard that he reigned in the East; and perhaps a custom then in use to reward the most excellent, with repute of immortal Parentage: to Sarpedon was said to be the Son of Jupiter, Æneas of Venus, and Achilles of Thetis) who had extended his Conquests to the uttermost parts of Ethiopia, before he came to the Wars of Troy; where slain by Achilles, Aurora is signified to have made this intercession for him unto Jupiter.

*Rob'd of my Memnon, robu brave Arms in vain
Bore for his Uncle, by Achilles slain
In his youth's flower (so would you Gods) came I,
O chief of Powers, a mother's anguish, by
Some honour given him lesson, death with some Re-comfort; 'twas assent, and greedy flame
Devour'd the funeral pile, and curled flames
Day over-cast: at when bright Sol assumes
From streams thick vapours, nor is seen below,
The flying dying sparkles jointly grow
Into one body: Colour, form, life spring
To it, from fire, which levity doth wing.*

*Memnonis orba mei venio: qui fortis frustra
Pro patre tulit ardua suo: primique sub annis
Occidit à forti (sic du voluisti) Achille.
Da precor huic aliquem solatia mortis honorem,
Summe Deum rector, matremque vulnera leni.
Jupiter annuere: cum Memnonis ardens alto
Conruit igne rogos: nigrisque volumina fumi
Insecere diem, veluti cum flumina natus
Exhalant nebulas, nec Sol admittitur infra.
Aera favilla volat; glomerataque corpus in unum
Denfatur, faciemque caput, lustrisque colorem
Atque animum ex igni: levitas sua praebeat alas.*

Ovid. Met. l. 13.

A fiction invented by flatterers, to insinuate into the favour of greatness, strengthening that opinion in the vulgar, by some illusion or other.

Having rid seven or eight miles along the skirts of the Hills, we crossed the Valley, and anon that other Rivulet a little above where it falleth into the Road of Acre; where, to our comfort, we spy'd the Ship that brought us to Alexandria, with another of London, called the Elizabeth Comfort. When entering the Town, we were kindly entertained by our Country-men. Here we staid, the rest of our Company proceeded unto Tripoly, this being the mid-way between it and Jerusalem. But our Muccer-in would not rest satisfied with half of his hire, according to our compact, whom we were glad to be rid of for twenty Dollars a man: our oaths being bootless against a True Believer; for so they do term themselves.

This City was called Ace at the first; a refuge for the Perfians in their Egyptian Wars; then Ptolomais, of Ptolomy King of Egypt; Colonia Claudii, of Claudius Caesar, who here planted a Colony, afterward Acon, and now Acre. Seated on a level, in form of a triangular Shield, on two sides washed with the Sea, the third reaching the Champaign. The carthals shews that the body hath been strong, double immured, fortified with Bulwarks and Towers, to each Wall a Ditch, lined with stone, and under those divers secret Potterns. You would think by the ruins, that the City rather consisted wholly of divers conjoyning Castles, than any way mixed with private dwellings; which witness a notable defence, and an unequal assault; or that the rage of the Conquerours extended beyond Conquest: the huge Walls and Arches turned top-sy-turvy, and lying like Rocks upon the foundation. On the South-side lies the Haven, no better than a Bay; open to the West, North-West and South-West winds, the bottom stony, and ill for their Cables. When possit by the Christians, it was an Episcopical See, and under the Metropolitan of Tyris. It was taken from them by Omer the Saracen; and recovered by Baldwin at the first, assisted by the Genoese with threecore and ten Gallies; who had for their labour the third part of the revenue arising out of the Haven; with dwellings and other immunities assigned them: Saladine made it sloop again to the Mahometan yoke: again delivered in the third years siege, by our Riebard the First, and Philip

Philip the French King. There are the ruins of a place, which yet doth acknowledge King Richard for the Founder; confirmed likewise by the passant Lion. An hundred years after it remained with the Christians; and was the last receptacle in the Holy Land, for the Knights Hospitallers of St. Johns of Jerusalem, called thereupon St. John de Acre; to whom a goodly Temple near the South-side of the City was consecrated, which now over-toppeth the rest of the ruins. In a Vault thereof a mass of Treasure was hid by the Knights of the Order, which being made known from time to time unto their Successors, was fetch'd from hence about forty years since by the Gallies of Malta; the Inhabitants abandoning the Town upon their landings. In the year 1291. besieged by an hundred and fifty thousand Mahometans, Acre received an utter subversion, which the Mamelucks after in some fort repaired, and lost it at last, with the name and the Empire, unto the Turkish Selymus. It is now under the Sanzack of Saphet, and usurped with the rest of that Province, by the Emor of Sidon. In the Town there are not above two or three hundred Inhabitants, who dwell here and there in the patch'd-up ruins; only a new Mosque they have, and a strong square Cave (built where once was the Arsenal for Gallies) in which the Franck Merchants securely dispose of themselves and their Commodities. Who, for the most part, bring hither ready Monies, (Dutch Dollars being as generally, throughout Jury and Phœnicia, equivalent with Royals of eight, elsewhere less by ten Alpers) freighting their Ships with Cottons that grow abundantly in the Country adjoining. Here have they a Cadee, the principal Officer. The English are much respected by the principal Moors; inasmuch, as I have seen the striker stricken by his fellow: a rare example amongst the Mahometans. Which I rather attribute to their policy than humanity; left, by their quitting of the place, they should be deprived of their profit, they being the only men that do maintain their Trading. Here they wrastle in Breeches of oyled Leather, close to their Thighs; their bodies naked, and anointed according to the ancient use, derived, as it should seem by Virgil, from the Trojans:

Exercet parias oleo labente palestras
Nudati socii
Virg. Æn.

Disrob'd they wrastle in their Countries guise
With gliding oyl

who rather fall by consent than by sleight or violence. The Inhabitants do nightly house their Goats and Sheep, for fear of the Jacals (in my opinion no other than Foxes) whereof an Infinite number do lurk in the obscure Vaults, and reedy Marshes adjoining to the Brook; the Brook it self abounding with Tortoises.

Four days we stayed at Acre; in which time we vainly expected the leisure of the Merchants to have accompanied us to Nazareth, distant from hence about fifteen miles; who go by one way, and return by another, for fear of the Arabs; now a small Village of Galilee; seated in a little Vale between two Hills; where are the remains of a goodly Temple (once the Chair of an Archbishop) erected over the house of the Blessed Virgin; whereof there is yet one room to be seen, partly hewn out of the living Rock, amongst the Christians of great veneration. But the Romanists relate, that the room wherein she was born, was born by the Angels (at such time as the Country was universally possessed by the Infidels) over Seas and Shores to a City of Ilyria. But when those people grew niggardly in their offerings, it was wrap'd from thence, and set in the Woods of Picenum, within the possessions of a noble Lady named Lanretta; frequented by infinite numbers of Pilgrims: Where many miscarrying by the ambushment of Thieves, who lurked in the Woods adjoining, the Blessed Virgin commanded the Angels to remove it unto a certain Mountain belonging unto two Brethren, where she got much riches and sumptuous apparel, by the benevolence of her Votaries, and her charitable Miracles. By which means the two Brethren grew also rich, and withal dissentious about the division of their purchases. Whereupon it was once more transported by those winged Porters, and set in the place where as now it standeth, near to the Adriatick Sea, and not far from Ancona; yet retaining the name of Lanretta. Who can but wonder at the fators of these wonders? amongst whom Muretus, none of the least learned.

O cœli dilectæ domus, possesque beati,
V olue per æthereas, Judææ à sinibus, oras
Aligerum, mandante Deo, vexere manipuli!
Hic virgo, genitura Deum, genitricis ab alvo
Prodiit, & blandis molli vagitibus auras!

O house! below'd of heaven! O happy post!
By winged Minstrels, thorow skies from coasts
Of Juda brought, Jehovah bidding! Here
Was that blest Virgin born, that God did bear!

Here

Here, a maid pure, in truth and praise'd repate;
Her holy womb swell'd with that saving fruit;
He who all mind, th' eternal and only Son;
To Father equal; who to man undone
Brought hope and life from heaven-bere, (little) play'd,
And left his mother, in time happy made.

Hic quoque virginæ fœrata lande pudoris
Sanctæ salutifero nutuerunt viscera fœtu
Ille opifex cunctorum, illa æterno unica proles,
Æquæ patri ille homini primæva ab origine lapso
Spem cœlo vitæque ferens hæc luscæ in aula
Parvulus, & sanctæ blande obtulit oscula matri.

In which is her Image (made, as they say, by St. Luke) of the hue (though a Jew) of a Blackamore. This Conclave hath a Cover of Marble; yet not touched by the fame; included within a magnificent Temple, adorned with Armors and Trophies, and beset with Statues and Tables, representing her miraculous Cures and Protections, whereof the afore-said Votary.

Lo, all the Church with tables hung, confests
Thy saving aid to wretched mans distress:
This is from bowels-torturing fever rid,
Rebelling thee in soul. The setting Kid,
Sad Hyads, be safe sies; when deaf Seas roar
Storm-beat, by thee set on the long'd-for shore.
He upon whom a wrongful doom hath pass'd,
Now death expecting in dark dungeon cast,
The wrong by thee reveal'd, reviews his wife,
His sons and parents, with a new-given life.

Certe equidem tota pendentes æde tabellas
Aspicis, quæ te miseris prælo esse loquuntur;
Hic te animo spectans torrentem viscera febrem
Depulit; ille Hyadas tristes Hædonumq; cadentem
Spectavit tutus; vertentibus æquora ventis,
Et duce te patrias enavæ silvas ad oras.
Criminis ille reus falsi, sub judice duro.
Dum mortem expectat, tenebroso in carcere clausus.
Numere Diva tuo, detecta fraude revisit,
Uxorem & natos, exoptatumq; parentem.

And well hath been paid for her labour; her Territories large; her Jewels inestimable; her Apparel much more than Princely, both in coit and variety; her Coiffers full: of whom, though the Pope be a yearly Borrower, yet are they doubly replenished by the first and later spring-tides of devotion. Now at Nazareth no Christian is suffered to dwell by the Moors that inhabit it. Most of the old City seemeth to have stood upon the Hill that adjoineth; which bears the decays of divers other Churches. Nazareth gave the name of Nazareans unto Christians, called here corruptly Noftranas at this present.

Upon the eighth of April we went aboard the Trinity, and hoisted sails for Sidon; the winds favourable, and the Seas composed; but anon they began to wrangle, and we to suffer. Spouts of water were seen to fall against the Promontory of Carmel. The tempest increased with the night, and did what it could to make a night of the day that ensued. I then thought, with application, of that description of the Poet,

The bitter storm augment; the wild winds wage
War from all parts, and joy with the Seas rage.
The sad clouds sink in showers; you would have thought
That bright-swoln Seas even unto heaven had wrought,
And heaven to Seas descended. No Star shewn;
Blind night in darkness, tempest, and her own
Dread terrors loit; yet thence dire lightning turns
To more fear'd light, the Sea with lightning burns.

Altera crescit hyems, omnique à parte feroces
Bella gerunt venti, fretaque indignancia miscent.
Ecce cadunt largi resolutis nubibus imbres,
Inque fretum credas totum descendere cælum,
Inque plagas cœli tumefactum scendere pontum:
— Caret ignibus æther.
Cæcæque nox premittit tenebris hyemif; fulgi;
Difficulus tamen hæc, præbentq; micantia lumen
Fulmina, fulmineis ardentes ignibus undæ.
Ovid. Met. l. 11.

But the distemperature and horror is more than the danger, where Mariners be English, who are the absolute under heaven in their perdition, and are by Foreigners compared unto fishes. About four of the clock we came before Sidon; the Ship not able to attain to the harborage of the Rock, which is environed by the Sea, and the only protection of that Road for Ships of good burthen. But some of us were so sick, that we desired to be set ashore in the Skiff, a long mile distant (which was performed, but not without peril.)

Phœnicia is a Province of Syria, interpoling the Sea and Galilee, stretching North and South from the River Valanus, to the Cattle of the Peregrines; which is on the far-side of the Mount Carmel.

Phœnix did give the Land a lasting name.

Et qui longa dedit terris cognomina Phœnix.
Sil. Ital. l. 1.

Brother unto Cadmus, and the fifth from Jupiter. His great Grand-father was Epaphus, his Grand-father Belus Prifcus, (reputed a God, and honoured with Temples; called Bel by the Affyrians, and Baal by the Hebrews) his Father Ageor. Belus the Jef, called alfo Maher, was fon unto Phœnix, King of Phœnicia by decent, and of Cyprus by Conquest. He had iflue, Pygmalion and Dido, who well revenged of her Brother for the death of her Husband, fled unto the Confinnes of Lybia, and there created the City of Carthage. The Carthaginians names, as Hannibal, Asdrubal, Anna, &c. did shew that they had their Original from hence. But the coming thither of Aeneas, and caufe of her death, is held by divers no other than a fiction. For Appian
(if his credit may ballance with Virgil) reports that Carthage was built full fifty years before Troy was destroyed. And Anfonius upon her Picture:

*Illa ego sum Dido vulu, quam conspicis hospes,
Assimulata modis, pulchraque mirificis,
Talis eram; sed non Maro quam mihi finxit erat mens:
Vix nec incestis lata cupidinibus,
Namque nec Aeneas vidit me Troius unquam,
Nec Lybian advenit claffibus Ilia.
Sed furas lupiens, atque arma proceras jarba,
Scravi, fateor, morie pudicitiam;
Pectore transfixo cautos quod perulit enes;
Non furor aut lafo crudus amore dolor.
Sic occidit juvat, vixi sine vulnere fama,
Ultra virum, potius moribus optui.*

*I Dido, whom this table doth impart,
Of paffing beauty drawn by happy art;
Such was when living; not of such a mind
As Maro feign'd, to furious lusts inclin'd.
Me Troy Aeneas never saw; nor bore
The Ilion ships unto the Lybian shore,
But flying outrage, and jarbas, I
By death secur'd my besieg'd chastity. (breft
That struck the chaste steel through my constant
Nor rage, nor injur'd Love, with grief oppress'd
So, pleas'd I felt: lov'd undefam'd, (belov'd)
Revenge'd my husband, built a City, dy'd.*

Phœnicia is said by others to be named of a Date, which is called Phœnix in the Egyptian Tongue; the abundance growing in that part of Egypt having given a name to this people, who were formerly Egyptians.

— Hi rubro gurgite quondam
Mutavere domum, ymnique per aquora vestri,
Lustrare salum, primi docuere carinis
Ferre cavis orbis commercia; sydera primi,
Servavere poli—Dionys.

*These earst from the red Gulph remov'd; who durst
On Seas by new-found ways adventure first:
First taught to fraught ships with chang'd merchandize;
First, stars observ'd in the character'd skies.*

together with Arithmetick and Letters,

*Phœnices primi (sæpe si creditur) ausi
Mansuram sudibus vocem signare figuris.
Nondum flumines Memphis contexere Byblos
Noverat; & laxis tantum volucreque feræque,
Sculptæque servabant magicas animalia lingua.
Lucan l. 3.*

*Phœnicians first impress (if same be true)
The first voice in rude figures: Memphis knew
Not yet how stream-lov'd Byblos to prepare;
But birds and beasts, carv'd out in stone, declare Their Hieroglyphick wisdom:*

which Letters Cadmus, binished by his Father (the Builder of Thebes in Boetia, by him perhaps so called of the Egyptian Thebes) did communicate to the Grecians. To them also some attribute the invention of Poetry; an Art by Art not to be attained; which giveth admirable fame and memory to the deserver, and inflameth the noble mind with a virtuous emulation. The chief Sea-bordering Cities of Phœnicia are Tripolis, Byblis, Berytus, Sidon, Tyrus, and Ptolomai now called Acre.

Tripolis is so called, because it was jointly built by Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. It is seated under Libanus, and commanded by a well-furnished Citadel, manned with two hundred Janizaries. Before it there is an ill-neighbouring Bank of Sand, which growth daily both in greatness and nearness; of which they have a Prophetic, that it shall in process of time be devoured. The Town and Territories are governed by a Bassa. Two miles off, and West from it, is the Haven; made by a round piece of Land adjoining to the Main by an Isthmus; the mouth thereof regarding the North. On each side there is a Bulwark, kept by an hundred Janizaries, and planted with Ordnance to defend the entrance. Hither of late the Grand Signior hath removed the Seal, which was before at Alexandretta; a Town in the furthest extents of the Straites, beyond the River Orontes; most contagiously feated by reason of the Marishes and lofty bordering Mountains (towards the North, being a part of Taurus) which deprive it the rayishing Sun for no small part

part of the day; inasmuch, that not many Foreigners escape, that there linger any season, who get not a horse before the Sun be high-mounted, and return again ere too low-declining. Notwithstanding the Merchants do offer great sums of Money, to have it restored unto that place, as more convenient for their Traffick with Aleppo
(the principal Mart of that place of Asia, for Silks, and sundry other Commodities) from thence, but three days journey, being eight from Tripoly; which the Turk will not yet assent to, for that divers Ships have been taken out of that Road by Pirates, there being no Forts for protection, nor no fit place to erect them on. A thing usual it is between Tripoly and Aleppo, as between Aleppo and Babylon, to make tame Doves the speedy transporters of their Letters; which they wrap about their legs like Jellies, trained therunto at such times as they have young ones, by bearing them from them in open Cages. A Fowl of notable memory. Nor is it a modern invention: For we read that Thourosbones, by a Pigeon stained with Purple, gave notice of his Victory at the Olympian Games, the self-same day to his Father in Aegina. By which means also the Count Hircus held intelligence with Decimus Brutus in Mutina. The like perhaps is meant by the Poet, when he saith,

*As if from ports removed far, from some
A woful Letter swiftly wing'd should come.*

— Tanquam è diversis partibus orbis
Anxia præcipiti venisset Epistola penna;
Juv. Sat. 4.

When the Christians besieged Acre, Saladine sent out one of these winged Scouts, to confirm the courages of the besieged, with promise of a speedy relief; when, I know not by what chance or policy, intercepted, and furnished with a contrary message, it occasioned a sudden surrender.

Byblis was the Royal seat of Cyneras (who was also King of Cyprus) the Father of Adonis, slain by a Boar; deified, and yearly deplored by the Syrian, in the month of June, they then whipping themselves, with universal lamentation. Which done, upon one day they sacrificed unto his Soul, as if dead; affirming on the next, that he lived, and was ascended into Heaven. For feigned it is, that Venus made an agreement with Proserpina, that for six months of the year, he should be present with her; alluding unto Corn, which for so long is buried under the Earth, and for the rest of the year embraced by the temperate Air, which is Venus. But in the general Allegory, Adonis is said to be the Sun, the Boar the Winter, whereby his heat is extinguished; when desolate Venus (the Earth) doth mourn for his absence, re-created again by his approach, and pro-creative virtue. Aloft, and not far from the Sea, stood his celebrated Temple: The City was first called Heves, of Heveus sixth son unto Canaan. In the time of the Christians, it was an Episcopal See, now a place of no reputation. Three miles on this side runs the River of Adonis, which is said by Lucian, to have stream'd blood upon that solemnized day of his Obsequies. At this day it is called Canis, as they there report; of a Dog of stone (that now lies with his heels upwards, in the bottom of the Chanel) which by strange Magical motions and sounds, fore-shewed the alternate Fate of that Country. This was the Northern Confinnes of the Kingdom and Patriarchy of Jerusalem.

Berytus was so called of the Idol Berith, but originally Geris of Gergisus, fifth son unto Canaan. It was subverted by Tyrphon, and re-edited by the Romans that there planted a Colony, and called it Julia Felix; who, by the bounty of Augustus, were endued with the Privileges of Citizens of Rome. Agrippa there placed two Legions, by whom, and his Predecessor Herod, it was greatly adorned; as after with Christian Churches and the See of a Bishop, being under the Metropolitan of Tyrus. With the rest, it hath lost his beauty, but not his being; now stored with Merchandize, and much frequented by Foreigners.

But now return we to Sidon, the most ancient City of Phœnicia, built, as some write, by Sida the Daughter of Belus; according to others, by Sidon the first-born of Canaan. Some do attribute the building thereof to the Phœnicians, who called it Sidon, in regard of the plenty of Fish, which frequented those Coasts; for Sidon sig-nifieth Fish, in their language. In fame it contendeth with Tyrus, but exceedeth it in antiquity, and is more celebrated by the Ancients. The seat thereof is healthful, pleasant, and profitable; on the one side walked with the Sea, on the other side with the fruitful Mountains that lie before Libanus; from whence fall many Springs, wherewith they overflow their delicate Orchards, (which abound with all variety of excellent fruits) and when they list, exclude them. The making of Crystal glasses was here first invented, made of the forehead sand, brought hither before it would become fusible. Amongst others right famous, Sidon is honoured with the birth of Bacchus, and was an Episcopal See, depending on the Archbishoprick of Tyru. But this once ample City full suffering, when the often changes of those Countries, is at this day contracted into narrow limits; and only shews the foundations of her greatness, lying East-ward of this that standeth, and overshadowed with Olives. There is nothing left of antiquity, but the supposed Sepulchre of the Patriarch Zebulon, included within a Chappel amongst those ruins, and held (especially by the Jews) in great veneration. The Town now being is not worth our description; the Walls neither fair, nor of force; the Haven decayed, when at best but serving for Gallies. At the end of the Peir stands a paltry Block-house, furnished with suitable Artillery. The Mosques, the Bannia, and Cave for Merchants, the only Buildings of Note.
of

The Inhabitants are of sundry Nations and Religions, governed by a succession of Princes, whom they call Emers; defended, as they say, from the Druses; the remainder of those French-men which were brought into these parts by Godfrey of Bulloign, who driven into the Mountains above, and defending themselves by the advantage of the place, could never be utterly destroyed by the Saracens. At length, they afforded them peace and liberty of Religion; conditionally, that they wore the white Turbants, and paid such Duties as the natural Subject. But in tract of time, they fell from the knowledge of Christ, nor thoroughly embracing the other, are indeed of neither. As for this Emer, he was never known to pray, nor ever seen in a Mosque. His name is Faccardine, small of stature, but great in courage and achievements; about the age of forty, subtil as a Fox, and not a little inclining to the Tyrant. He never commenceth Battel, nor executeth any notable Design, without the consent of his Mother.

*Illa magis arres Æmaqze carmina novit,
Inque caput liquidæ arte recurat aquas.
Scit bene quid gramen, quid torto coossita rombo
Licia, quid valeat virtus amantis equæ.
Cum voluit torto glomerantur nebula cœlo:
Cum voluit puro fulget in orbe dies,
Sanguine, si qua fides, stillantia lydera vidi,
Purpureus Lunæ sanguine vultus erat.
Hanc ego nocturnas vivas volitare per umbras
Suspicio, & pluma corpus anile regi.
Evocat antiquis proavos, aravolque sepulchris,
Et solidam longo carmine findit humum.*

Ovid. Am. l. 1. E. 8.

To this Town he hath added a Kingly Signiory; what by his Sword, and what by his Stratagems. When Morat Bassa (now principal Vizier) came first to his Government of Damafco, he made him his by his free entertainment and bounty, which hath converted to his no small advantage; of whom he made use in his contention with Frecke, the Emer of Salbec, by his authority strangled. After that he pickt a quarrel with Joseph Emer of Tripoly, and disposeth him of Barns, with the Territories belonging therunto; together with Gazar, about twelve miles beyond it, a place by situation invincible. This Joseph hated of his people, for his excessive Tyranny, got to be made Sedat of Damafco, (which is, General of the Souldiery) and by that power intended a revenge. But in the mean season, Faccardine sackt Tripoly it self, and forced the Emer to fly in a Venetian Ship unto Cyprus, where again he embarked in a Frenchman, and landed at the Cattle of Pergrines; and there by Achmer the Arabian (formerly mentioned) entertained, he repaired to Damafco, entred on his charge, converting his whole strength upon the Sidonians, now in the field, and joy'd with Ali Bassa his confederate. In a Plain, some eight miles thort of Damafco, the Armies met, the Damascens are foiled, and pursued to the gates of the City; the Conquerors lodge in the Suburbs, who are removed by the force of an hundred and fifty thousand Sultanians. This Battel was fought about the midst of November, in the year of our Lord 1506. Three months after a Peace is concluded amongst them. But the Summer following, Morat the great Vizier having overthrowen Ali Bassa of Aleppo, that valiant Rebel (who in three main Battels withstood his whole Forces; having set up an order of Sedgemen in opposition of the Janizaries) they fought by manifold complaints, to incite him against the Emer of Sidon, as confederate with the Traitor; which they urged with gifts, received and lost; for the old Bassa, mindful of the friendly offices done him by the Emer, (corrupted also, as is thought, with great fums of money) not only not molested, but declareth him a good Subject. Having, till of late, held good correspondence with the City and Garrison of Damafco, they had made him Sauziack of Saphet. Now, when according to the Government of Turkie, which once in two or three years doth use to remove the Governours of Cities and Provinces, and that another was sent by the Damascens, to succeed him, he refused to resign it; notwithstanding tending to the Istadar or Treasurer, the Revenue of that Sauziack. This was the first occasion of their quarrel. He got from the improvident Peasants the Cattle of Elkiffe, which he hath strongly fortified, and made the Receipt of his Treasure, and the Cattle of Banius from the Sheek that ought it, by a wile; which standeth on a Hill by it self, and is indeed by nature invincible. For the Emer, in peaceable manner, pitching his Tents not far from the Wall, was kindly visited, and entertained by the Sheek; when desirous to see it, he conducted him up, having not above twenty or thirty in his company, but those privately armed, leaving order that the rest should ascend by two's and by three's, and so surprised it without blood-shed; planting the Inhabitants in other places within his Dominions, and strengthening this with a Garrison. Out of the Rock whercon it is mounted ariseth one of the two heads of Jordan. His Signiory stretching from the River of Canis (which they call Celp) to the foot of Mount Carmel. In which the places of principal note are Gazir, Barns, Sidon, Tyru, Acre, Saffet (which was Tyberias) Diar, Canar, Elkiffe, Bannian, the two heads of Jordan, the Lake Semochonis (now called Houle) and Sea of Tyberias: with the hot bath adjoining; Nazareth, Cana, and Mount Tabor. Saffet is the principal City, in which there abide a number of Jews, who affect the place, in that Jacob had his being thereabout, before his going down into Agypt. The Grand Signior doth often threaten his subversion, which he puts off with a jest, that he knows that he will not this year trouble him; whose displeasure is not so much provoked by his incoaching, as by the revealed intelligence which he holds with the Florentine; whom he suffers to harbour within his Haven of Tyru, (yet excusing it as a place lying waste, and not to be defended) to come ashore for fresh water, buys of him under-hand his Prizes, and furnisheth him with necessities. But designs of a higher nature have been treated of between them, as is well known to certain Merchants employed in that business. And I am verily perswaded, that if the occasion were laid hold of, and freely pursued by the Christians, it would terribly shake, if not utterly confound the Ottoman Empire. It is said of a certainty, that the Turk will turn his whole Forces upon him the next Summer; and therefore more willingly condescends to a Peace with the Persian. But the Emer is not much terrified with the rumour (although he seeks to divert the tempest by continuance of gifts, the favour of his Friends, and professed integrity:) for he not a little presumeth of his invincible Forts, well stored for a long War, and advantage of the Mountains; having besides forty thousand expert Souldiers in continual pay, part of them Mors, and part of them Christians; and if the worst should fall out, hath the Sea to friend, and the Florentine. And in such an exigent, intendeth, as is thought, to make for Christendom, and there to purchase some Signory: For the opinion is, that he hath a mass of Treasure, gathered by Wiles and Extortions, as well from the Subject, as from the Foreigner. He hath coyned, of late, a number of counterfeit Dutch Dollars, which he thrusteth away in payments, and offers in exchange to the Merchants, so that no new Dutch Dollars, though never so good, will now go current in Sidon. He hath the fifth part of the increase of all things. The Christians, if Jews, do pay for their heads two Dollars apiece yearly; and head-money he hath for all the Cattel within his Dominions. A severe justice; re-edifies ruinous; and replants depopulated places; too strong for his Neighbours, and able to maintain a defensive War with the Turk; but that it is to be suspected, that his people would fall from him in regard of his Tyranny. Now as for the Merchants, who are for the most part English, they are entertained with all Courtelie and Freedom, they may travel without danger, with their Purfes in their hands, paying for Custom but three in the hundred. Yet these are but trains to allure them, and disguise his voracity; for if a Factor die, as if the Owner, and he his Heir, he will seize on the Goods belonging to his Principals, and seem to do them a favour, in admitting of a Redemption under the value; so that they do but labour for his harvest, and reap for his Garners: For such and such like things, they generally intend to forsake his Country. The Merchandize appropriate to this place are Cottons, and Silks, which here are

the

are made in the Mulberry-Groves, in indifferent quantity. Other Commodities (which are many, and not coorse) they fetch from Damascus, two days journey from hence; interposed with the snow-topped Mountains of Amelibanus; so exceeding cold, that a Moor, at our being here, returning from thence in the company of an English Merchant, perished by the way; the heat then excessive great in the Vallies on both sides. Damascus is seated in a Plain, environed with Hills, and watered with the River Chrysoras, which descendeth with a great murmur from the Mountains; but after a while having entered the Plain, becometh more gentle; serving the City to abundantly, that few houses are without their Fountains, and by little Rivulets is let into their Orchards, than which the habitable Earth affordeth not more delicate for excellency of Fruits, and their varieties. Yet is this City subject to both the extremes of Weather; rich in Trades, and celebrated for excellent Artisans. We were desirous to have seen it, but were advised not to adventure, because of the lawless Spartans, there then residing in great numbers. The people about Sidon are greatly given to the nourishing of Cattel, (having notwithstanding not many) inasmuch as Beef and Veal are seldom here to be had, but when by chance they do break their legs, or otherwise miscarry. They fodder them in the Winter (for they cut no Grass) with Straw and the Leaves of Trees, whereof many do flourish continually.

Our Ship returning to Alexandria, and carrying with her two of our fellow Pilgrims; on the five and twentieth of April, we returned also towards Acre by Land, in the company of divers English Merchants: the Champaign between the Sea and the Mountains, fruitful, though narrow, and croffed with many little Rivulets. After five miles riding, we came to a small solitary Mosque, not far from the Sea, erected, as they say, over the Widows house that entertained Eliu. Clofe by it are the foundations of Sarepta, commended for her Wines,

Vina mihi non sunt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna :
Quæque Sareptano palmite mista bibas.
Sidonius.

Gazetick, Chian, nor Falernian Wine
Have I: drink then of the Sareptan Vine.

It was the Seat of a Bishop, and subject unto Tyrus. Right against it, and high mounted on a Mountain, there is a handsome new Town, now called Sarapanta. Beyond, on the left hand of the way, are a number of Caves cut out of the Rock; the habitations, as I suppose, of men in the Golden Age, and before the Foundation of Cities.

Cum frigida parvas
Præberet spelunca domos, ignemque laremque,
Æ pecus, & domos communi clauderet umbra :
Sylvæstrem montana thorum cum sterneret uxor
Fronibus & calmo, vicinarumque ferarum
Pellibus.
Juv. Sat. 6.

When cool caves humble dwellings did afford,
The fire, the lar, the cattle, with their owner plac'd
All under one shed: when the wife then chaf'd
(For then uncourtly) made her Sylvan bed
Of straw and leaves, with skins of wild beasts spread.

These are mentioned in the Book of Josiah, and called Mearab (which is, the Caves of the Sidonians) and were afterward called the Caves of Tyrus. A place then inextinguishable, and maintained by the Christians; until, in the year 1167. it was by the corrupted Souldiers delivered to the Saracens.

We cross'd a little Valley divided by the River Eluberus (now called Casneir) which derives its Original from Libanus, and glideth along with a speedy course thorough a strangely intricate Chancel, guilty of the death of the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, who falling from his Horse as he pursued the Infidels, and oppress'd with the weight of his Armour, was drown'd therein, and buried at Tyrus. On the other side of the Valley stands an ancient Cave, whose port doth bear the portraiture of a Chalice. Five miles beyond, we came to a Village seated on a little Hill in the midst of a Plain; the fame by all likelihood that was formerly called Palætyrus, or old Tyrus. Forge I must not the custom observed by the Inhabitants hereabout, who retain the old Worlds Hospitality. Be the Passenger Christian, or whatsoever, they will house him, prepare him extraordinary fare, and look to his Mule, without taking of one Alper. But these precise Mahometans will neither eat nor drink with a Christian, only minister to his wants; and when he hath done, break the earthen dishes wherein he was fed, as child. Now, thorow this Town there passes a ruinous Aqueduct, extending a great way towards the South, and thorow the Champaign, learning oft to climb above his beginning, and from hence proceedeth directly West unto Tyrus, which standeth about two miles and a half below it.

Tyrus

Tyrus was said to be built by Tyrus, the seventh Son of Japhet; re-edified by Phœnix, made a Colony of the Sidonians, and afterward the Metropolis of Phœnicia. The City was consecrated to Hercules, whose Priest was Sibemus. The Citizens famous for sundry Excellencies and foreign Plantations. Carthage, emulous of Rome, (who yearly sent hither their Embassadors) Letis and Utica, do acknowledge them for their Founders, together with Gader. For, thinking those streights to be the uttermost bounds of the earth, on Europe side they placed that City, and a Temple unto Hercules, on the opposite shore, called thereupon the Pillars of Hercules.

— A people fierce in War.

— Genus intrastabile bello.
Virg. Æn. l. 1.

Nor were their Women unexpert in their Weapons.

The Tyrian Virgins Quivers use to bear,
And Purple buskins ty'd with ribands, wear.

Virginibus Tyriis mos est gestare pharetræ,
Purpureoque alæ furs vincire corthuro.
Ibid.

Yet branded with a twofold imputation:

Inconstant Tyrians —
— Tyrians double-tongu'd.

Et Tyriotes instabiles —
Lucan. l. 3.
— Tyriolique bilingues.
Virg. Æn. l. 4.

And no marvel, since their principal profession was Merchandize; having elected the site thereof for that purpose. For it stood upon a rocky Island, removed seven hundred paces from the Continent; the shape thereof circular, the building lofty by Nature, and impregnable fortified: Sovereign of the Seas, and chief for Commerce thorowout the whole Universe, whose glory is described by Ezekiel, and destruction foretold; inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar, who is said to have joynted it first to the Continent; but that passage was soon after demolished by assailing Seas and industry of the Tyrians. Yet seventy years the City lay waste, and then re-edified, was overthrown again 200 years after, by Alexander; whose undefatigable perseverance made all things possible. For when the rest of Phœnicia had resigned their freedoms to his service, the Tyrians rather accepted of amity, than subjection; who sent him a Crown of Gold, with plenty of provision; which he thankfully received, and made known withal, that he purpos'd to sacrifice unto Hercules, the Patron of their City, and his Ancestor. The Embassador told him, that he might so do in his Temple in Palætyrus. Whereat enraged, Tou contemns (quoth he) my Army of Foot, for that you inhabit an Island, but I ere long, will make it appear you are of the Continent. They are dismissed, and he provides for the assault. Palætyrus affords him stones, and Libanus timber. The South-West winds, to which it lay open, the profundity thereof, and little show of much labour, makes the Souldier desperate. But revenge re-inflamed their courages, by the refusal of Peace (being proffer'd, lest so long a Siege should prove an impediment to their Victories) and slaughter of their Heralds, aggravated with scoffs: That they so glorious in Arms, should now bear burden like Asse, and demanding if Alexander were greater than Neptune. But when, contrary to their expectations, they saw the pile mount above the supercilies of the Sea, and fortified with Towers of Wood, to defend from all annoyances, they fired one of their greatest Ships, being full of combustible matter; which driving against it, not only caught hold of the Towers, but of as much of the pile that surmounted the Water; the fury of the Sea, subverting the remainder. His second attempt, they again made frustrate, whereupon he thought to have desisted; but lest he should impeach his Fame, which subdu'd more than his Sword, and that this City might witness to the World, that he was not to be withstood; once more he renewed his enterprize, which by the arrival of his Navy was effected. After seven months siege, the City was taken and defaced, two thousand of the Citizens crucified all along the shore, the rest being put to the Sword; save those that were under-hand fav'd by the Sidonians, then serving Alexander, and mindful that both were once but one people. But Tyrus, shortly after, overcame these calamities, and recovered both her former riches and beauty. That part which joyn'd to the forced Lithmus (which is not much more than a stones call over) being fortified with four strong Walls, five and twenty foot thick, entred thorow a Bulwark, on each side whereof stood six high Towers, almost conjoyning to each other. On the South-side upon a Rock and adherent, stood the Castle, as invincible as starley; the rest environed with a double Wall, well adorned with Turrets equally distant. On the Northside

side lay the Haven, entered between two Towers, and affording a most safe station. This City did justly boast of her Purples, the best of all other, and taken hereabout. A kind of shell-fish, having in the middle of his jaws, a certain white vein, which contained that precious liquor, a dye of sovereign estimation. The invention thereof is ascribed unto Hercules, who walking along the shore with a Damoel, whom he loved, by chance his Dog had seized on one thrown up by the Sea, and smothered his lips with the tincture; which the admiring, refused to be his, until he had brought her a Garment of that colour, who not long after accomplished it. This blood, together with the opened veins, were filled in a Vessel of Lead, drawn thorow a Limbeck, with the vapour of a little boiling water. The tongue of a Purple is about the length of a finger, so sharp and hard, that he can open therewith the shell of an Oyler; which was the cause of their taking. For the Fisher-men did bait their Wheels therewith, which they suffered to sink into the bottom of the Sea; when the Purples repairing thereunto, did thrust their tongues between the Oylers, and pricking the gaping Oyfers (kept, for that purpose, long out of the water) were by the sudden closings of their shells, retained; who could neither draw them unto them, nor approach so near as to open them. They gathered together in the first of the Spring, and were no where to be found at the rising of the Dog-star. The Fisher-men strove to take them alive; for with their lives they cast up that tincture. The colour did differ according to the Coasts which they frequented: On the Coasts of Africa, resembling a Violet, or the Sea when enraged. Near Tyrrus, a Rose, or rather our Scarler, which name doth seem to be derived from them; for Tyrrus was called Sar, in that it is built upon a Rock, which gave a name unto Syria (as the one at this day Sur, and the other Suria) by the Arabians (they pronouncing san for sun, and scar for sar) and the fish was likewise named Sar, or Scar rather in their Language:

Hic petit excidit urbem, miserisque penates,
Uc gemma bibat, & Sarrhano dormiat ostro.
Virg. Georg. l. 2.

He Cities sack, and houses fills with groans,
To lie in Scarlet, drink in precious stones.

A colour destinated from the beginning, to Courts and Magistracy; so that sometimes it is used for Magistracy it self, as by Marshall unto Janus:

Purpura te solus, te colat omnis honos.
Lib. 8. Epist. 8.

The happy Purple, thee all honours honour.

The Murex, though differing from the Purple, are promiscuously used:

— Tyrioue ardebat murice lana.

— The wool with Tyrian Murex shin'd.

The excellency of the double dye, being light upon through defect of the former. But the Purple is now no more to be had, either extinct in kind, or because the places of their frequenting are now possit by the barbarous Mahometans. After the aforesaid restauration, Tyrrus preserved her dignity for the space of nine hundred years, remaining, for six hundred thereof, in the Christians possession; a Confederate with the Romans, and for her faith unto them ended with the immunities of the City. When the Christian Religion grew powerful in these parts, it was the Seat of an Archbishop, next in precedence unto the Patriarch of Jerusalem; fourteen Bishopsricks being under her Primacy, viz. Porphyra, Acon, Sarepta, Sidon, Cesarea, Philippi, Beritus, Byblis, Betrus, Tripoly, Orthosia, Achis, Aradus, Tortosa, and Maradaca. In the year of our Lord 636. it became enthral'd to the Saracens. Baldwin the second, four hundred forty years after, delivered it from that yoke, assisted by the Venetian Navy. It was then divided into three portions: two allotted to the King of Jerusalem, and the third to the Venetians, and was restored to her Archiepiscopal See, but not unto all her inferior Bishopsricks; those on the North of the River of Canis being then subject to the Patriarch of Amiack. After this, with admirable valour, they repulsed the assaults of Saladin, then Lord of Jury. But in the year 1280. it was subdued by the Egyptian Mahometani, and from them by the Ottoman Selymus. But this once famous Tyrrus is now no other than an heap of ruins; yet have they a reverent respect, and do instruct the pensive beholder with their exemplary frailty. It hath two Harbours, one on the North-side, the fairest, and best throughout all the Levant, (which the Curious enter at their pleasure) the other choaked with the decays of the City. The Emer of Sidon hath given it, with the adjacent Territories, to his Brother for a possession, comprehending fix miles breath, and in some places three. A level naturally fertile, but now neglected; watered with pleasant Springs; heretofore abounding with Sugar-Canes, and all variety of Fruit-Trees.

We pass'd by certain Cisterns, some a mile and better distant from the City; which are called Solomons by the Christians of this Country. I know not why, unless these were they which he mentions in the Canticles. Square they are, and large, replenished with living water, which was in times past conveyed by the Aqueduct into the aforesaid Orchards; but now useles and ruined, they shed their waters into the Valley below, making it plathy in sundry places, where the air doth suffer with the continual croaking of Frogs, not unaptly signified to have their beginning from those bawling Peasants,

— Who still
Do rudely wrangle, and of all shame void,
Though under water, under water chide.

nunc quoque turpes
Littus exerceant linguas, pulsoque pudore
Quamvis fuit sub aqua, sub aqua male dicere tentant;
Ovid. Met. l. 6.

Within night we came unto certain Tents that were pitched in those Marishes belonging to the Emer Brothers Servants, who there pastured their Horses; where, by a Mulletto, the Master of his Horse (whose Sister he had married) we were courteously entertained. The next morning, after two or three hours riding, we ascended the high and woody Mountains of Saron, which stretch with intermitted Valleys unto the Sea of Gabilee; and here have their white Cliffs wash'd with the furses (called Capo Bianco by the Mariner) frequented (though forsaken by men) with Leopards, Bores, Jackals, and such like savage Inhabitants. This passage is both dangerous and difficult, neighboured by the precipitating Cliff, and made by the labour of man; yet recompensing the trouble with fragrant favours; Bays Rosemary, Marjoran, Hyssop, and the like, there growing in abundance. They say, that of late a Thief, pursued on all sides, and desperate of his safety, (for rarely are offences here pardoned) leap'd from the top into the Sea, and swam unto Tyrrus, which is seven miles distant; who, for the strangeness of the fact, was forgiven by the Emer. A little beyond we pass'd by a ruinous Fort, called Scandarone of Alexander, the Builders here built to defend this passage: much of the Foundation overgrown with Oylers and Weeds, being nourished by a Spring that falleth from thence into the Sea. A Moor not long since was here assailed by a Leopard that culk'd in the aforesaid Thicket; and jumping upon him, overthrew him from his As; but the Beast having wet his feet, and mist of his hold, retired as ashamed without further violence. Within a day or two after he drew company together to have hunted him; but found him dead of a Wound received from a Bore. The higher Mountains now coming short of the Sea, do leave a narrow level between. Upon the left hand, on a high round Hill, we saw two solitary Pillars, to which some of us rid, in hope to have seen something of antiquity; where we found divers others laid along, with the half buried Foundation of an ample Building. A mile beyond we came to a Fort maintained by a small Garrison of *Moor*s, to prohibit that passage if need should require, and to secure the Traveller from Thieves; a place heretofore unpassable, by reason of their outrages. The Souldiers acquainted with our Merchants, freely entertained us, and made us good cheer, according to their manner of diet; which was requited with the present of a little Tobacco, by them greedily affected. They also remitted our Capbar; using to take four Dollars apiece of the stranger Christians. From hence ascending the more eminent part of the rocky and naked Mountains, which here again thrust into the Sea (called in times past the Tyrian Ladder) by a long and steep descent we descended into the Valley of Acre. Divers little Hills being here and there dispersed, crown'd with ruins, (the covets for Thieves) and many Villages on the skirts of the bordering Mountains. E're yet night, we re-entred Acre.

FINIS LIBRI TERTII.

THE FOURTH BOOK.

...Penitus
toto divisos orbe
Britannos,
Virg. Eccl.

OW shape we our course for England. Beloved foil; as in scite,

—Wholly from all the World disjoint;

so in thy felicities. The Summer burns thee not,
nor the Winter benums thee; defended by the Sea from wantful incursions, and by the valour of thy Sons from hostile invasions. All other Countrys are in some things defective; when thou, a provident Parent, dost minister unto thine whatsoever is useful: foreign additions but only tending to vanity and luxury. Virtue in thee at the least is praised, and Vices are branded with their names, if not pursued with punishments. That Ulysses

Qui mores hominum multorum vidit & Urbes. Who knew many mens manners, and saw many Cities:
Hom. Odysf. li.

if as found in judgment as ripe in experience, will confels thee to be the Land that floweth with Milk and Honey.

Our Sails now swelling with the first breath of May, on the right hand we left Cyprus, sacred of old unto Venus, who (as they feign) was here first exhibited to mortals.

Venerandam auream coronam habentem pulchram
Venerem
Canam, quæ Cyprî munimenta fortis est
Martina; ubi illam Zephyri vis mollior ipirantis
Suscitavit per undam multiformi maris
Spuma in molli. Hom. in Hymnis.

*I sing of Venus crown'd with Gold, renown'd
For fair, that Cyprus guards, by Neptune bound.
Her in soft some mild-breathing Zephyre bore
On murmuring waves unto that fruitful shore.*

Thither

Thither said to be driven in regard of the fertility of the soil, or becausly lulls of the people, who to purchase portions for their Daughters, accustomed to prostitute them on the shore unto Strangers; an Offering besides held acceptable to their Goddess of Viciousness. Some write that Cyprus was so named of the Cypress-trees that grew therein. Others of Cyros, who built in it the ancient City of Aphrodisia; but grossly; for Cyros lived six hundred years after Homer, who had used that name; but more probably of Crypus, the more ancient name; in that often concealed by the furies.
It stretcheth from East unto West in form of a Fleece, and thrusteth forth a number of Promontories; whereupon it was called Ceraffis, which signifieth horned; so terming
Promontories: as in Phyllis to Demophoon,

*A Bay there is like to a bow when bend,
Steep horns advancing on the shores extend.*

*Est sinus adductos modicè falcatus in arcus;
Ultima prærupta cornua mole rigent.
Ovid. Epyf. 2.*

the occasion of that Fable of Venus her metamorphosing the cruel Sacrificers of that Island into Oxen, or else called so of the tumours that grew in many of their fore-heads: It is in circuit according unto Strabo 427 miles, 60 miles distant from the rocky shore of Cilicia; and from the main of Syria an hundred: from whence it is said to have been divided by an Earth-quake. Divided it was into four Provinces; Salamina Amastrosia, Lapetia, and Paphia, so named of their principal Cities. Salamina was built by Teneer in memorial of that from whence he was banished by his Father Tela- man, for not revenging the death of his Brother.

*When Teneer fled from fire, and Salamina,
Crown'd with a wreath of Poplar dip'd in Wine.
He thus his sad friends cheers; Go we lov'd-mates
Which way soever Fortune leads; the Fates
Are kinder than my Father; nor despair
When Teneer guides you. He whose answers are Most sure, Apollo, in another land,
Did say another Salamina should stand.*

*Teneer Salamina patremque
Quam fugeret, tamen ura Lyxo
Tempora populeæ ferris vincisse coronas,
Sic tristes affatus amicos.
Quo nos cunque feret melior fortuna parente
Iominus o facili comitesque:
Nil desperandum Teucro duce & aspice Teucro.
Certe enim promissæ Salamina sacrum.
Hor. l. 1. Od. 7.*

The Island being assigned unto him by Belus, if Didoes relation may be believed.

*Teneer, exiled Greece, to Sidon came;
Who a new Kingdom sought by Belus aid.
My Father Belus then did Cyprus name:
And that rich Country tributary made.*

*Atque equidem Teuctrum mecum: idola venire,
Finiolus expulsum patriis nova regem petentem
Auxilio Beli; genitor tunc Belus opimam
Vastabat Cyprum, & victor dititione tenebat:
Virg. Æn. l. 1.*

This City was afterwards called Constantia; but destroyed by the Jews in the days of the Emperor Trajan; and finally by the Saracens, in the Reign of Heraclius upon the ruins thereof, the famous Famagosta was erected by King Cyssa, as they say, the Father of St. Katharin. Eternized in fame by the unfortunate valour of the Venetians, and their auxiliary Forces under the command of Signior Bragadine; who with incredible fortitude withstood the furious assaults made by the populous Army of Selymus the Second, conducted by Mustapha; and after surrendered it upon honourable conditions, infringed by the perjured and execrable Bassa. Who entertaining at his Tent with counterfeit kindness the principal of them, suddenly picking a quarrel, caused them all to be murdered, the Governour excepted, whom he reserved for more exquisite torments. For having cut off his ears, and exhibited him by carrying of earth on his back to the derision of the Infidels, he finally slew'd him alive; and stuffing his skin with Chaff, commanded it to be hung at the main-yard of his Galley. Famagosta is situated in a Plain, between two Promontories; in form well-nigh quadrangular, whereof two parts are washed with the Sea, indifferent strong, and containing two miles in circumference. It standeth almost opposite unto Tripoly, having a Haven which openeth South-East; the mouth thereof being streightened with two Rocks which defend it from the weather. There was Saint Barnaby born, there suffered Martyrdom under Nero, and there buried; to whom the Cathedral Church was dedicated. This greatly ruined City is yet the strongest in the Island, the seat of the Zunziack; who was lately put into an affright upon the approach of the Florentine Ships, that he fully purposed, as is credibly reported, to have succoured it upon their landing. But they (perhaps possessed with a mutual terror) forbore to attempt it. The aforesaid region of Salamina, which lyeth on the East of the Island, contained also the celebrated Cities of Aphrodisium, Tamassus abounding with Vitriol and Verdigrise, Asfinoe, Idaliuum and the neighbouring Groves foisted off; the Olympian Promontory (where Venus had her Temple, into which it was not lawful for any Woman to enter) with the Hill on the opposite Pedafium, square on the top like a Table, and cried unto her, as all the afore-named. In the territory of Lapathia comprehending the North-part, where once stood Tremitus; in the heart almost of the Island, and midst of a goodly Plain stands the late regal City of Nicosia; circular in form, and five miles in circumference; not yielding in beauty (before defaced by the Turk) unto the principal Cities of Italy; taken by the aforesaid Muslapha on the ninth of September, in the year 1570; with an incredible slaughter, and death of Pandalus the un-warlike Governour. The chief of the Prisoners, and richest spoils, he caused to be imbarqued in two tall Ships, and a great Gallion, for a present to send unto Selymus: when a noble and beautiful Lady, preferring an honourable death before a life which would prove so repleat with slavery, and hated prostitutions; set fire on certain Barrels of Powder, which not only tore in pieces the Vessels that carried her, but burnt the other so low, that the Sea devoured their Reliques. The *Frank*s have their Factors resident in Nicosia; partly inhabited by the ancient Greek, Cypriots, and partly by Turks and Moors. The Buildings are low, flat-roof'd, the entrances little, for the most part ascended by Stairs for the more difficult entry. North of this, and upon the Sea, stood Cervina, erected by Cyprus, now of great strength, and called Cervine; (yet succoured to the Turk, before it was besieged) and at the West-end of that Province, the City of the Sun, with the Temples of Venus, and Jfis, built by Phalaris and Achamur the Athenians. The Mountain of Olympus lies on the South of Lapathia, high, and taking up fifty miles with his basis; now called, The Mountain of the Holy Cross; clothed with Trees of all sorts, and stored with Fountains, whereon are a number of Monasteries of all the Greek, Coloicos of the Order of Saint Basil. South of the which, even to the Sea, extendeth Amathusa.

—gravidamque Amathusina metallis.
Ovid. Met. l. 10.

—heavy with Mines of Brass:

so called of the City Amathus, now scarcely shewing her foundation, sacred unto Venus, and wherein the Rites of her Adonis were annually celebrated. Built perhaps unto Amasis (for I do but conjecture by the name, and in that it lieth opposite unto Egypt) who was the first that conquered Cyprus. East thereof are the Saline, so named of the abundance of Salt that is made there; where the Turk did first land his Army; the shore thereabout being fit for that purpose. On the West-side of Amathus there is a Promontory, in form of a Peninsula, called formerly Curias (of the not far distant City built by the Argives, at this day named Episcopia, where Appollo had a Grove hard by a Promontory, from whence they were thrown that but presumed to touch his Altar) now called the Cape of Cats; whereon are the ruins of a Monastery of Greek Coloicos, fair when it flourished, with a sumptuous Temple dedicated to Sct. Nicholas. The Monks, as they lay, being obliged to foster a number of Cats for the destruction of the abundance of Serpents that infested those quarters; accustoming to return to the Convent at the found of a Bell when they had sufficiently hunted. Paphia comprehendeth the West of Cyprus; so called of the maritime City, built by the Son of Pigmalion by his Ivory Statue; such said to be in regard of her beauty; of whom having long lived a single life (in detestation of those lustful women) he became enamoured, Hic Paphum genuit, de quo tenet insula nomen.

Ovid. Met. l. 10.

See Paphus bare, whose name that Island bears.

But Paphus, according to others, was built by Cyneras (both Father and Grand-father to Adonis.)

Adonis) who called it so in remembrance of Paphus his Father. This Cyneras having sworn to assist Menelaus with fifty Ships, sent him only one, with the models of the other in Clay to colour his perjury. No place there was through the whole earth where Venus was more honoured.

An hundred fires Sabean guns consume
There in her fans, which fragrant wreaths perfume.

Ubi templum illi, centrumque Sabæo
Thuræ calente aræ, fœtisque recentibus halent.
Virg. Æn. l. 1.

Five miles from thence stands the City of Bassa, called New Papho heretofore, and built by Agapenor, frequented from all parts both by men and women; who went from thence in a solemn Procession unto the Old, to pay their Vows, and celebrate her Solemnities. But her Temples both in the one and in the other (as throughout the whole Island) were razed to the ground by the procurement of Saint Barnaby. West of this stood Cythera, a little Village, at this day called Combea; sacred also unto Venus, and which once did give a name unto Cyprus. That, and not the Island that lies before

Mine Amathus, high Paphus, Cythera, Idaliæ Groves—

Est Amathus est celsa mihi Paphos atque Cythera, Idaliæque domus—
Virg. Æn. 10.

The uttermost Promontory that stretcheth to the West, with the super-eminent Mountain, now called Capbo, Saint Pifano; bore formerly the name of the Athenian Acamur: East of which stood the City of Asfinoe (at this day Lefcare) renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. This Island boasts of the births of Asclapiades, Solon, Zeno the Stoick, and Author of that Sect, Apollonius, and Xenophon. At the first it was to overgrown with wood, that besides the infinite waste made thereof in the melting of metals: it was decreed that every man should inherit as much as he could make Champain. A Country abounding with all things necessary for life; and therefore called Miscaria. Whole wealth allured the Romans to make a Conquest thereof: a prey that more plentifully furnished their Coffers, than the rest of their Triumphs. It afforded matter to build a Ship from the bottom of the Keel to the top of her Top-gallant, and to furnish her with Tackle and munition. It produceth Oyl and Grain of several sorts; Wine that lasteth unto the eighth year, Grapes whereof they make Raisins of the Sun; Citrons, Oranges, Pomegranates, Almonds, Figs, Saffron, Coriander, Sugar-canes; sundry Herbs as well Physical as for food, Turpentine, Rubarb, Colloquintida, Scammony, &c. But the staple Commodities are Cotton-woolls (the best of the Orient) Chamolets, Salt, and Sope-Althes. They have plentiful Mines of Brass, some small store of Gold and Silver, green Soder, Vitriol, Alome, Opiment, White and Red Lead, Iron, and divers kinds of precious Stones of inferior value, amongst which the Emerald, and the Turky. But it is in the Summer exceeding hot, and unhealthy, and annoyed with Serpents. The Brooks (for Rivers it hath none) rather merit the name of Torrents, being often exhausted by the Sun: infomuch, as in the time of Constantine the Great, the Island was for six and thirty years together almost utterly abandoned; Rain never falling during that season. It was first possessed by the Sons of Japhet; paid tribute first by the Egyptian Amasis; then conquered by Belus, and governed by the posterity of Teneus, until Cyrus expelled the nine Kings that there ruled. But after the Grecians repossessed the Sovereignty, and kept it until the death of Nicoles; and then it continued under the Government of the Ptolomees, till the Romans took it from the last of that name: restored it was again to Cleopatra, and her Sister Asfinoe, by Antonius. But he overthrown, it was made a Province of Rome; and with the transmigration of the Empire, submitted to the Byzantine Emperours; being ruled by a succession of Dukes for the space of eight hundred years, when conquered by our Richard the first, and given in exchange for the titular Kingdom of Jerusalem unto Guy of Lusignan; it continued in his Family, until in the year 1473, it was by Catharina Cornelia a Venetian Lady, the Widow to King Jmes the Bastard, who had taken the same by strong hand from his Sister Carlote, resigned to the Venetians; who ninety seven years after did lose it to the Infidels, under whose yoke it now groaneth. But it is for the most part inhabited by Grecians, who have not long since attempted an unfortunate insurrection. Their Ecclesiastical estate is governed by one Arch-Bishop, and three Bishops; The Metropolitan of Nicosia, the Bishop of Famagosta, Paphus, and Amathus, who live upon stipends.

Much becalmed, and not seldom crossed by contrary winds, for divers days we saw Sea and Air only (yet once within ken of a Promontory of Licia, called the seven Capes) until we approached the South-east of Candy, called formerly Crete,

Crete Jovis magni nutrix veneranda teraxque
Et frugum & pecoris—Dionf.

Crete sacred Nurse to Jove, a fruitful ground
With Corn and Cattel stor'd—

and to make up the Dittich with that of Homers,

—pulchra, pinguis, circumflua.
Hom. Ody. l. 19.

—fair, fat, sea-bound;

It lieth an hundred miles South-west from the lesser Assie, as many South-east from Peloponnesus, and North of Africa, an hundred and fifty: wherefore aptly saith Homer,

Crete quidem terra medio est in nigro ponto.
Idem.

Crete in the midst of the dark Sea doth stand.

imitated by Virgil,

Crete Jovis magni medio jacet insula ponto.
Vir. Æn. l. 3.

Crete seated in the midst of Seas, Joves Land.

lying neither in the Adriatick, Ægean, Carpathian, nor Libian Seas; which on each side environ it. It stretcheth two hundred and fifteen miles from East to West; containing forty five in breadth, and in circuit five hundred and twenty. Full of Mountains, yet those not unprofitable, affording excellent pasturages; the highest is Ida.

Ida frequens piceis & quercubus optima mater.
Dionyl.

In pitch rich above others,
Of Oaks the pregnant mother:

seated almost in the midst of the Island, now called Agortiti; from whose lofty and spiny top both Seas may be discerned. Where standeth a little Chappel; compact of great square stones without lime, in form of an arch; being there to exceeding cold in the heat of the Summer (at which time Goats and Sheep can only graze there) that the Shepherds are glad to defend before night into the Valley. From thence issue many Springs. Some part of it is a plain descent, some precipitate, some clothed with Trees of several kinds, but by the Cypress especially graced. It fostreth nothing that is wild, but Hares, Red Deer, and Fallow; and is the inheritance of the Calargy: a Family, that for this thousand years, have retained a prime repute in this Island. Two other Mountains of fame there be, the one at the West end, called anciently Leucaore, now la Spachia; another at the East end, now called Sebia, and anciently Diſia, which receiveth that name from Diana, to whom this Island was greatly devoted; it signifying Nets: she being an Huntress and Patroness of Hunters:

Ades en comita Diva Virago
Cujus regna pars terrarum
Secreta vacat—
—tua Creteas
Dextra—
Sequitur cervas: nunc veloces
Figis Damas leviori manu. Senec. in Hipp.

Virago, thou that Sovereign art
Of woods, and wastes; the Cretan Hunt
Thy hand pursues, and with quick cunning
Strikes through the swifter Fallow running.

The story goes, how one Britomart, a Nymph of this Island, eagerly following the Chafe, and overthrown ere aware in a toil, not able to free her self, the beast now rushing upon her; she vowed a Temple to Diana, if so be she escaped that danger; who forthwith let her on her feet; and of those Nets was called Diſiſma: Diana also assuming that name for the love which she bare her. The ancient Geographers do jointly affirm, with Virgil, that the Cretians

Centum urbes habitant magnas;
Virg. Æn. l. 3.

Did in an hundred ample Cities dwell:

which were not so many in the days of Homer:

—in hæc nonaginta civitates,
Inter hæc Gnosſas magna civitas ubi Minos Per novem annos regnavit Jovis magno con-fabulator, Ody. l. 19.

With ninety Cities crowned. Of these most great High Gnosſus; for nine years the royal seat
Of Minos, be that talk with Jove.

This

This City long held the Regality; seated in a Plain, not far from the East, extent of the Island, and from the North shore not above six Furlongs, where it had a convenient Haven: long since, having nothing left but a found of the name; a little Village there standing, called Cinosus. The next in dignity was

Gortina strongly wall'd—

Gortina bene cincta mœnibus.
Hom. Od. l. 19.

seated not far from the Southern basis of Ida: who sheweth what she was by her ruins; there yet remaining an Aqueduct entire, supported by a number of Arches, certain fragling Houses possessing the place, now named Mataria. The third Cydonia, now next to the greatest, and called Canea: seated towards the West, and on the North-shore; enjoying a large and safe Harbour. These three were all of those hundred that remained (or at least retained their repute) in the days of Sorabo, who was of this Country. For only it hath at this day Candy and Canea, fortified by Art, Rheimo and Sitia by Nature. Candy, that now giveth a name to the Island, standing upon the North-shore (as do all the rest) is a strong and well inhabited City, accommodated with an excellent Harbour; of which the elder Scaliger:

An hundred Cities finely wall'd (if true Fame sings) Times waste hath now reduc'd to few.
Small Towns I judge they were. Tet what destroy'd
In all; alone by Candy is supply'd.

Centum olim cinctis operosis mœnibus urbes
Reddidit ad paucos imperioſi dies.
Oppida parva tamen reor illa fuisse, sed audis
Quod deest ex reliquis Candia sola refert.
J. C. Scal.

The whole Island is divided into the Provinces of Canaa, Rheimo, Candia, and Sitia, lying further Eastward: strengthened both by the shore, in few places approachable, and by the many Fortresses. It hath no navigable Rivers. It aboundeth with Grain, Oyl, and Fruits of all kinds: among the rest, with the Apples of Adam, the juice whereof they tun up and send into Turkie, much used by them in their meats. The mountains afford diversity of Physical Herbs: as Citius (and that in great quantity) from whence they do gather their Ladanum, Halimus, that resisteth Famine, and Dictamnus, so sovereign for wounds; whose virtue was first found out by Stags, and Bucks, that by eating thereof, ejected the Arrows wherewith they were wounded. Used by Venus, in the cure of her Aeneas.

With her white hand she crops from Cretian Ide
The fresh-leav'd stalk, with flower in purple d'd,
A sovereign Herb well known to fearful Deer,
Whose trembling sides the winged Arrows bear.

Ipsa manu generix Creteas carpit ab Ida
Pulveribus caulem foliis, & flore comantem
Purpureo, non illa feris incognita capitis
Gramina cum tergo volueres hætere sagitta.
Virg. Æn. l. 12.

But that which principally enricheth this Country, is their Muscadines and Malms, those kind of Grapes brought first hither from Aroſia, a Mountain of Chios. Wines that seldom come unto us uncured, but excellent where not, (as within the Strights) and compared unto Nectar.

Crete I confess, Joves Fortress to be:
For Nectar only is transferr'd from thee:

Vera quidem fateor Jovis incunabula magni:
Nam liquor haud alibi Nectaris ille venit.
J. C. S. al.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Island are related by Homers Ulyſſes:

Infinite people of mixt speech here dwell:
Æbians, Eteocretans who excel
In valour: Cidons, Dorians, Trichaites,
Divine Pelasgians.

—In hæc autem homines
Multi infiniti—
Alia alio non lingua mixta, in ipsa quidem Achivi, Ibi autem Eteocretes magnamini ibique Cidones,
Dorenceque, Trichaites, divinique Pelasgi.
Hom. Odyſſ. l. 19.

But the natural people hercof were the Cidonians, and Eteocretans, or Curetes, so ancient, that they are feigned even in this place to have their creation. The last named inhabited Ida, Cretas their first King, of whom the Island was so named. They lived in Caves, (for Houses then were not) and used no other coverture than Nature afforded them. They found out many things useful for life, as the taming of certain Beasts, whom they gathered first into Flocks and Herds; and brought civility amongst men, by instituting Laws, and observing of Discipline. They taught how to direct the voice unto unto harmony, poss'ing the mind with the awe of Religion, initiating with Orders and Ceremonies. They found out the use of Brags and Iron, with the Sword and Head-piece: the first inventors of shooting, hunting, and dancing in Armour. Being called Idæi Dædili, either in regard of their numbers, or observed measures: but according to Diodorus, of their ten Ephori. The Progeny of the Painim gods were born in this Island, to whom divine honours were ascribed: to some for their beneficial inventions, to others for introducing Justice amongst men, repelling of injuries and violence, cherishing the good, deterring the bad, suppressing by force of Arms the Tyrants of the earth, and relieving the oppressed. But that they were no other than mortals, the Cretians themselves do refuse, who affirm that Jupiter was not only born and bred in their Country, but buried, and did there his Sepulchre (though reproved by Callimachus)

Cretes mendaces semper Rex alme sepulchrum
Exercere tuum; tu vivis semper & uique es.

Still lying Cretians, sacred King, dare rear
Thou a Tomb: thou ever liv'st, and art each where.

on the Mountain Lassia: and that he was fostered by the Curetes in Aegina, which lyeth on the South of Ida; concealed and delivered unto them by his Mother, to prevent his slaughter. For Saturn resolved to destroy his male children: either having fo compacted with his Brother Titan, or to prevent the Prophecy, which was that his his Son should depose him. A cruelty used amongst the Grecians; it was (and therefore this not to be held for a Fable) to expose the Infants whom they would not foster, unto the mercy of the Deities. Long after the death of these reputed Gods, lived Minos, and Rhadamanth: who for their justice upon earth, were assigned after to have been Judges in Hell. Notorious is the adultery of Pasiphaë, with the General Taurus; which gave unto the Poets the invention of their Minotaur (so called they the Bullard)

Destinat hunc Minos thalami removere pudorem,
Multiplicat, dino cæcis includere testis.
Dædalus ingenio fabraz celeberrimus arcis
Ponit opus, turbatque notas & lumina flexu.
Ducit in erroris variatum ambrage viarum.
Ovid. Met. l. 8.

To hide his marriage shame, him Minos dooms
To durance in un-explicable Rooms.
The work of witty Dædalus; confounding
Th' direct by resemblance: abounding
With winding ways, the Maze of error rounding.

made an imitation of that in Egypt, as aforesaid. But no tract thereof remained in the days of Pliny, although at this day, the Inhabitants undertook to shew it unto strangers. For between where once stood Gortina and Gnosus, at the foot of Ida, under the ground are many Meanders hewn out of the Rock, now turning this way, and now that way; inasmuch that it is not without a conductor to be entered, which you are to hire at the adjoining Village. I have heard an English Merchant say (who hath seen it) that it was so intricate, and vast, that a Guide which used to shew it unto others for twenty years together, lost himself therein, and was never more heard of. Within are little Turrets which over-look the walls that make the divisions, in many places not reaching to the top. But by most this is thought to have been but a Quarry, where they had the Stone that built both Gnosus and Gortina, being forced to leave such Walls for the support of the Roof, and by following of the veins to make it so intricate. Mercellus first made the Cretians stoop to the Romans. After they were under the Greek Emperours, until Baldwin the Latine Emperour of Constantinople betwixt the Island upon Konissæ, Marquis of Monteferrat, who sold it to the Venetians in the year 1194. But in the time of Duke Dandalus, they rebelled, and were again in the year 1243, reduced to their obedience. So remain they at this day, the Greeks being permitted the free exercise of their Religion, by whom it is for the most part inhabited. And although in many things they imitate the Venetians, yet still retain they their old vices; Lyres, evil Beasts, slow Bellies, whereof formerly upbraided by Saint Paul, out of their Poet Epimenides. They still exercise shooting; wherein throughout all Ages they have excelled,

Gnosusque agitare pharetras
Docta, nec Eois pejor Gortina sagittis.
Lucan. l. 3.

Gnosians good Archiers are, the use of Bows,
Not Parthia better than Gortina knows:

using the Scythian Bow, but much better than the Scythians. The Country people do dance with their Bows ready bent on their arms, their Quivers hanging on their their backs, and their Swords by their sides, imitating therein their Ancestors, (a custom also amongst the Lacedæmonians) called by them Pyrreia: and as of old, so use they to sing in their dancing, and reply to one another. The better sort of men are apparelled like the Venetians, and so are the women, who seldom stir abroad, except it be to the Church, but in the night time. The common people are clothed like the Greeks of Simo, of whom we have spoken; the Women only wearing loose Veils on their heads, the breasts and shoulders perpetually naked, and died by the Sun into a loathsome tawny.

Now out of sight of Candia, the Winds both slack and Contrary, we were forced to bear Northward of our course, until we came within view of Zani; where our Master purposed to put in (since we could not shorten our way) to furnish the Ship with fresh Water and other Provisions. But anon, we discover five Sails making towards us, and imagining them to be men of War, made all things ready for defence: When to our better comfort, they proved all English, and bound for England, with whom we comforted; they having supplied our necessities. Their names were the Alibia (Admiral) the Centaure (Vice-Admiral) the Delight, the Blessing, and a Ship of Plimouth, called (if I forget not) the Jonathan. Two days after (the Winds now something more friendly) the Admiral gave chase to a little Ship, which we supposed a Pirat, who left her course, and fled before the Wind; so that without too much expence of time he could not approach her. We past by the South side of Sicilia, and left Malta on the left hand; when out of hope to be let a hoar (for it was the purpose of our Merchant before he met with these comforts, to have touched at Messina) and fadded with the apprehension of so tedious a Voyage; on the sudden the Wind came about, and blowing fiercely West and by North, did all the night following exercise his fury. Whereby our Ships rather losing than gaining of their way, and exceedingly tossed, the weather not likely to alter, they resolved to put into Malta. So on the second of June being Sunday, we entered the Haven that lies on the East-side of the City of Valetta; which we saluted with eighteen pieces of Ordnance. But we were not suffered to come into the City, (though every Ship had a neat Patent to shew, that those places from whence they came were free from Infection) nor suffered to depart when the Wind blew fair; which was within a day or two after. For the Gallies of the Religion were then setting forth, to make some attempt upon Barbary, and the reason of the restraint was, lest being taken by the Pyrats, or touching upon occasion at Tripoly, Tunis, or Argire, their designs might be by compulsion or voluntarily revealed: nor would they suffer any Frigate of their own for fear of surprisal, to go out of the Haven, until many days after that the Gallies were departed. But because the English were so strong (a great Ship of Holland putting also in to seek company) and that they intended to make no more Ports; on the sixth of June, they were licensed to set sail, the Masters having the night before in their several Long-Boats, attended the return of the Great Master (who had been abroad in his Galley, to view a Fort that then was building) and welcomed him home with one and twenty pieces of Ordnance.

But no intreaty could get me aboard; chusing rather to undergo all hazards and hardships whatsoever, than so long a Voyage by Sea, to my nature so irksome. And so was I left alone on a naked Promontory right against the City, remote from the concurrence of people, without provision, and not knowing how to dispose of my self. At length a little Boat made towards me, rowed by an Officer appointed to attend on Strangers that had no Prattick, lest others by coming into their company should receive the infection; who carried me to the hollow hanging of a Rock, where I was for the night to take up my Lodging; and the day following to be conveyed by him unto the Lazaretto, there to remain for thirty or forty days, before I could be admitted into the City. But, behold, an accident, which I rather thought at first to have been a Vision, than (as I found it) real. My Guardian being departed to fetch me some Victuals, laid along, and muling on my present condition, a Phalucco arrived at the place. Out of which there stepped two old Women; the one made me doubt whether she were so or no, she drew her face into so many forms, and with such annick gestures, stared upon me. These two did spread a Turke Carpet on the Rock; and on that a table-cloth, which they furnished with variety of the choicest Viands. Another arrived, which set a Gallant afloat with his two Amorsætes, attired like Nymphs, with Lutes in their hands, full of disport and forcery. For little would they suffer him to eat, but what he received with his mouth from their fingers. Sometimes the one would play on the Lute, whilst the other sang, and laid his head in her lap; their false eyes looking upon him, as if their hearts were troubled with passions. The attending Hags had no small part in the Comedy, administering matter of mirth, with their ridiculous moppings. Who indeed (as I after heard) were their Mothers, born in Greece, and by them brought hither to trade amongst the unmarried Fraternity. At length, the French Captain (for such he was, and of much regard) came and intreated me to take a part of their Banquet, which my stomach perwaded me to accept of. He willed them to make much of the Forestier; but they were not to be taught entertainment, and grew so familiar, as was not much to his liking. But both he and they, in pity of my hard Lodging, did offer to bring me into the City by night (an offence, that if known, is punished by death) and back again in the morning. Whilst they were urging me thereunto, my Guardian returned, and with him a Maltese, whose Father was an Englishman; he made acquainted therewith, did by all means dehort them. At length (the Captain having promised to labour my admittance into the City) they departed. When a good way from shoar, the Carriazans stript themselves, and leapt into the Sea; where they violated all the precriptions of modesty. But the Captain the next morning, was not unmindful of his promise, soliciting the Great Master in my behalf, as he sat in Council; who with the assent of the Great Crosses, granted me Prattice. So I came into the City, and was kindly entertained in the house of the aforesaid Maltese: where for three weeks space, with much contentment I remained.

Malta doth lie in the Libian Sea, right between Tripolis of Barbary, and the South-East angle of Sicilia; distant an hundred fourscore and ten miles from the one, and threescore from the other. It containeth threescore miles in circuit: and was called formerly Melita, of the abundance of honey. A Country altogether champaign, being no other than a Rock covered with earth, but two feet deep where the deepest, having few trees but such as bear fruit, whereof of all sorts plentifully furnished. So that their wood they have from Sicilia; yet there is a kind of great Thistle, which together with Cow-dung, serves the Country people for fuel; who need not much in a Climate so exceeding hot, hotter by much than any other which is seated in that same Parallel: yet sometimes temperate by the comfortable winds, to which it lies open. Rivers there are none, but sundry Fountains. The soil produceth no Grain but Barley. Bread made of it, and Olives, is the Villagers ordinary diet; and with the straw they sustain their Cattel. Commingle, Annis-seed, and Honey, they have here in abundance, whereof they make Merchandize; and an indifferent quantity of Cotton-wooll, but that the best of all other. The Inhabitants die more with age than diseases, and heretofore were reputed fortunate for their excellency in Arts, and curious Weavings. They were at first a Colony of the Phœnicians, who exercising Merchandize as far as the great Ocean, betook themselves to this Island; and by the commodity of the Haven, attained to much riches and honour: (who yet retain some print of the Punic language, yet so, that they now differ not much from the Morisco) and built in the midst thereof the City of Melita (now called Malta) giving or taking a name from the Island. Now whether it came into the hands of Spain, with the Kingdom of Sicilia, or won from the Moor by their Swords, (probable both by their Language, and that it belongeth to Africa) I am ignorant: but by Charles the Fifth, it was given to the Knights of Rhodes, as appeareth by Marinus of Uvina, exhorting Philip the Second to relieve them.

Eft Melite patris munus: nam Carolus olim
Hanc dedit ejctis longo post tempore bello
Turcarum Rhodius ducibus, magnoque Magistro.
Nunc quoque fimehte munuscula magne Philippe,
Sit munus Rex magne nam florentibus armis
Militibus nostris: tua quos non virida virtus
Servet ab exitio militantis dira tyranni.
Ossu. Marinus.

Malta's thy Fathers gift: which Charles did give
Th' expelled Knights of Rhodes, that did out-live
That long war and sad fate, by Turky impos'd;
Be's now great Philip thine, now when inclin'd
By a dire Tyrant. Shield them from the foe:
And in strong arms thy lively virtue show.

This Order of Knight-hood received their denomination from John, the charitable Patriarch of Alexandria; though vowed to Saint John Baptist, as their Patron. Their first Seat was the Hospital of St. John in Jerusalem (whereupon they were called Knight-Hospitaliers) built by one Gerrard, at such time as the Holy Land became famous, by the successful Expeditions of the Christians; who drew divers worthy persons into that Society; approved by the Pope Gelasius the Second. They by the allowance of Honorius the Second, wore Garments of black, signed with a white Cross. Raymond, the first Master of the Order, did amplify their Canons; infilling himself, The poor servant of Christ, and Guardian of the Hospital in Jerusalem. In every Country throughout Christendom they had Hospitals, and Revenues assigned them; with Contributions procured by Pope Innocent the Second. They were tyed by their Vows to entertain all Pilgrims with singular humanity; to life-guard their passages from Thieves and Incurions, and valiantly to sacrifice their lives in defence of that Country. But the Christians being driven out of Syria, the Knights had the Rhodes assigned them by the Greek Emperor, (others say by Clement the Fifth) which they won from the Turky, and lost again as aforesaid; retiring from thence unto Malta. There are of them here seven Alberges, or Seminaries: One of France in general, one of Avergne, one of Provence, one of Castile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, one of Al'many; and an eighth there was of England, until by Henry the Eighth dissolved, with what justice I know not. Yet is there one that supplies the place, in the election of the Great Master. Of every one there is a Grand Prior, who lives in great reputation in his Country, and orders the affairs of their Order. Saint John without Smithfield was in times past the Mansion of the Grand Prior of England. An Irish man living in Naples, and receiving a large Pension from the King of Spain, now beareth that Title; those that come for the Order, are to bring a testimony of their Gentry for six descents, which is to be examined, and approved by the Knights of their Nation; and is first to remain here a year for a probation. Nor are Women exempted from that dignity, admitted by a Statute made in the Master-ship of Hugo Reverus. Perhaps for that one Agnes, a noble Lady, was the Author, as they affirm, of their Order; but that there be any now of it, is more than I could be informed. The Ceremonies used in Knighting, are these: First, carrying in his hand a Taper of White Wax, he kneeleth before the Altar, clothed in a long loose Garment, and desisteth the Order of the Ordinary. Then in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, he receiveth a Sword, therewith to defend the Catholic Church; to repulse and vanquish the Enemy, to relieve the Oppressed, if need should be to expose himself unto death for the Faith, and all by the power of the Cross, which by the Cross Hilt is defigured. Then is he girt with a Belt, and thrice strook on the shoulders with his Sword, to put him in mind, that for the honour of Christ he is cheerfully to suffer whatsoever is grievous: who taking it of him, thrice flouriseth it aloft as a provokement to the Adversary, and so sheaths it again, having wiped it first on his arm, to testify that henceforth he will live undefiled. Then he that gives him Knighthood, laying his hand on his shoulder, doth exhort him to be vigilant in the Faith, and to aspire unto true honour, by courageous and laudable actions, &c. Which done, two Knights do put on his Spurs, gilt, to signify that he should spurn Gold as dirt, not to do what were ignoble for reward. And so goes he to Mass with the Taper in his hand; the works of Piety, Hospitality, and redemption of Captives, being commended unto him, told also of what he was to perform in regard of his Order. Then is asked if he be a Free-man, if not joined in Matrimony, if unwowed to another Order, or not of any Profession; and if he be resolved to live among them, to revenge their injuries, and quit the authority of secular Magistracy? Having answered thereunto, upon the receipt of the Sacrament, he vows in this order: I vow to the Almighty God, to the Virgin Mary, his immaculate Mother, and to Saint John Baptist, perpetually, by the help of God, to be truly obedient to all my Superiours, appointed by God and this Order, to live without any thing of mine own, and willball to live chastly. Whereupon he is made a partaker of their priviledges and indulgencies granted unto them by the See of Rome. Besides other Prayers, they are commanded to say an hundred and fifty Pater-nosters daily for such as have been slain in their Wars. They wear Ribands about their necks with brouches of the Cross; and Cloaks of black, with large white Crosses set thereto on the shoulder, of fine Linnen: but in the time of War they wear Crimson Manditions, behind and before so crossed, over their Armour. They come hither exceeding young, that they may the sooner attain to a commendam at home, (whereof many be of great value) not got by favour, but signiority; and are to live here for the space of five years (but not necessarily together) and to go on four expeditions. If one of them be convicted of a capital crime, he is first publicly degraded in the Church of Saint John, where he received his Knight-hood; then strangled, and thrown after into the Sea in the night time. Every Nation do feed by themselves in their several Alberges, and sit at the Table like Friars: but such as upon suit, do get leave to eat apart, have fixty Crowns allowed them by the Religious yearly; as all have five and twenty apiece for Apparel. There are here resident about five hundred, being not to depart without leave; and as many mote dispersed through Christendom; who hither repair upon every Summons, or notice of Invasion. The Religion is their general Heir, wherefore they dye; only each Knight may dispose of a fifth part of his substance. There be sixteen of them Counsellors of State, and of principal Authority, called Great Crosses; who wear Tippets, and Coats also under their Cloaks, that be signed therewith. Of these are the Marshal, the Master of the Hospital, the Admiral, the Chanceller, &c. When one doth die, another is Elect by the Great Master and his Knights, who give their voices (if I forget not) by Bullets, as do the Venetians, whereby both envy and faction is avoided. Now if the Great Master fall sick, they will suffer no Vessel to go out of the Haven until he be either recovered or dead, and another Elect, lest the Pope should intrude into Election, which they challenge to be theirs, and is in this manner performed. The several Nations Elect two Knights apiece of their own, and two are Elect for the English from amongst themselves; these sixteen chuse eight, and those eight do nominate a Knight, a Priest, and a Friar-Servant (who also wears Arms) and they three chuse the Great Master, out of the sixteen Great Crosses. This man is a Picked born, about the age of sixty, and hath governed eight years. His Name and Title, The Illustrious and most Reverend Prince, my Lord Friar Alopius of Wignian Court, Great Master of the Hospital of Saint Johns of Jerusalem, Prince of Malta, and Goza. For albeit a Friar (as the rest of the Knights) yet is he an absolute Sovereign, and is bravely attended on by a number of gallant young Gentlemen. The Clergy do wear the cognizance of the Order; who are subject to like Laws, except in Military matters.

thy

trangled

There are sixty Villages in the Island, under the command of ten Captains; and four Cities. Old Malta is seated (as hath been said before) in the middle of the Island

- A The City of Valletta
B The Castle of S. Hermese
C The Castle of S. Angelo
D Burgo
E La Isola
F The Platform
G The Fort of S. Michael
H The Fountain

upon a Hill, and formed like a Scutcheon, held of no great importance, yet kept by a Garrison. In it there is a Grot, where they say Saint Paul lay when he suffered shipwreck, of great devotion amongst them. The refined stone thereof they they cast into little Medals, with the Effigies of Saint Paul on the one side, and a Viper on the other, Agnus Dei, and the like; of which they vent store to the Foreigner. They say, that being drunk in Wine, it doth cure the venom of Serpents; and withal, though there be many Serpents in the Island, that they have not the power of hurting, although handled, and angered, bereft of their venom ever since the being here of the Apostle. The other three Cities (if they may all be so termed) are about eight miles distant, and not much without a Musket-shot each of other, near the East-end, and on the North-side of the Island; where there is a double Haven divided by a tongue of Rock, which extendeth no further than the conveniently large entrance. The East Haven resembleth the horn of a Stag, the first branch (as the Palm) affording an excellent Harbour for the greatest Ships, and the second for Gallies; the rest are shallow. Close to the uppermost top there is a Fountain of fresh water, which plentifully furnisheth all Vessels that do enter. On the tip of the afore-said tongue stood the strong Castle of St. Hermes, the first that the Turk besieged; which after many furious assaults, twenty thousand Cannon shot (whose horrible roarings were heard to Messina) and the loss of ten thousand lives, they took in the year 1565. in the month of June; but to the greater glory of the vanquished, that loss rather enraging than disheartning the remainder.

*Worthy of heaven (brave souls) from whence you came,
Lustre of men, of honour's, live your fame,
That Malta can from Turkish powers descend:
Nor thousand ships, nor horrid conflicts, bend
Your thoughts to fear; nor Scythian cruelty.
Angels admire your valour from on high,
Angels shall send (flight threats and barbarous strength)
Merits swift succour. Victory at length
Will crown your toils, and you to Olympus rear.
Mongh Heroes old, whom better times did bear:
But if Fates would that you your best blood spend
In bold defence, and so great labours end:
O valiant hearts! what better than to die
For Country, Churches, Altars? Greater glory
Never befall to man, nor ever shall:
Vanquished, you shall live vanquishers to all
Eternity: your honours, and renown'd
Exploits, shall ever in mens mouths be found.*

*Caelo alto demissa animæ dignissima caelo,
Lux inrita virum, lux nobilitatis, ab armis
Turcarum Meliten quæ fortiter ausa tucri:
Territa non acie horrentis, non mille carinis,
Sævitia aut dira Scythicæ impietatis ab alto
Mirantur superi fortissima Pectora ab alto
Demittunt (contemne minas & barbara tela)
Sperant meritis auxilium. Victoria tandem
Excipiet fessos, claresce repones Olympo
Heros inter, melior quos protulit ætas;
Quod si fata velint patriæ pro mœnibus acres
Pugnando tantos demum finire labores:
Quid melius quàm pro patriâ procumbere fortis?
Pro Fanis Arisque sacris? cui gloria major
Contingit? aut ullo potis est contingere feclo?
Victores vidi semper vivetis in omne
Temporis æterni spatium; perque ora virorum
Semper honos, semper clarissima gesta sonabunt.*

Offav. Manin.

Now upon the point of the Promontory, which lies between these two Branches of the Haven, where the Ships and Gallies have their stations, on a steep Rock stands the Castle of Saint Angelo, whose strength appeared in frustrating those violent Batteries, (being next besieged by the Turk) whereof it yet beareth the scars. At the foot of the Rock are certain Cannons planted, that front the mouth of the Haven. This Castle is not only divided by a Trench cut thorough the Rock, from the Burgo, a little City which possesseth the rest of that Promontory; being all a Rock, hewn hollow within for their better defence, and disjoyned by a great deep Ditch from the Land. South of this, and on the next Promontory, stands another Town, which is called La Isola: on the point thereof there is a Platform, and at the other end the strong Fort of St. Michael, yet inferior in strength to that of St. Angelo. Here remember we the piety of a Mahometan, descended, no doubt, of Christian Parentage, and favouring our Religion: who in the time of the strictest siege, and smallest comfort to the besieged, leap'd into the Sea, and maugre all the thor that was made at him, swam to this Fort; where first requiring and receiving Baptism, he made known unto them the secrets of the Enemy, advised how to frustrate their purposes, and bravely thrust himself forward in every extremity. But the Knights of the Order assisting one another, by their proper valour, so nobly behaved themselves, that the Turk began to despair of success; and upon the rumored approach of the Christian succours (which in the best construction by the over-circumpect Viceroy of Sicilia had been dangerously protracted) embarked themselves, and departed. But all, saving Burgo and Saint Angelo, reduced into powder; and the return of the Turk disheartened, it was propounded amongst the

R

Knights,

Knights, to abandon the Island, rather than vainly to repair, and endeavour to defend those lamentable ruins; the adversaries unequal power, and backward aid of the Christian Princes considered. But it too much concerned the state of Christendom, especially of the Countries adjoining, it being as it were both the Key and Bulwark thereof, to have it so forsaken: Inasmuch, that the Pope, the Florentine, and the rest of the Princes of Italy, encouraged them to stay; afflicting them with money, and all necessary provision. But especially the King of Spain; who over and above, did send them three thousand Pioneers, and levied in the Kingdom of Naples and Sicilia, to repair their old Fortresses, and begin a new City upon that tongue of Land which divideth the two Havens; now almost absolutely finished.

This is called the City of Valletta in the honour of John de Valetta, who then was Great Master. Not great, but fair, exactly contrived, and strong above all other; mounted aloft, and no where assailable by Land, but at the South-end. The Walls of the rest do join to the upright Rock, as if one piece, and are beaten upon by the Sea. That toward the Land is but a narrow Isthmus, where the Rock doth naturally rise: the Ditch without hewn down exceeding broad, and of an incredible profundity, strongly flank'd, and not wanting what fortification can do. This way openeth the only gate of the City; (the other two, whereto one leadeth to Saint Hermes, and the other to the East Haven, being but small Potterns; and hard within are two great Bulwarks, planted on the top with Ordnance. At the other end (but without the Wall) stands the Castle of Saint Hermes, now stronger than ever; whercof (as that of Saint Angelo) no French man can be Governour. Almost every where there are Platforms on the Walls, well stored with Ordnance. The Walls on the inside are not above six foot high, un-imbattell'd, and shelving on the outside; the Buildings throughout a good distance off, both to leave room for the Souldier, and to secure them from battery. Near the South-end, and on the West-side, there is a great Pit hewn into the Rock, out of which there is a Port cut under the Wall into the West Haven, intended (for yet unfinished) to have been made an Arsenal for their Gallies: that Harbour being too shallow for Ships: a work of a great difficulty. The Market-place is spacious, out of which the streets do point on the Round. The Buildings are for the most part uniform; all free-stone, two stories high, and flat at the top: the upper Rooms of most having Out-terrasses. The Great Masters Palace is a Princely Structure, having a Tower which over-looketh the whole Island. The Chamber where they sit in Council is curiously painted with their fights by Sea and by Land, both foreign and defensive. The seven Alberges of the Knights be of no mean building, amongst whom the City is quartered. Magnificent is the Church of St. Paul, and that of St. John; the one the Seat of a Bishop, and the other of a Prior. And St. John's Hospital doth merit regard, not only for the building, but for the entertainment there given; for all that fall sick are admitted thereunto. The Knights themselves there lodge, when hurt or diseased; where they have Physick for the body, and for the soul also (such as they give). The Attendants many, the Beds over-spread with fair Canopies; every fortnight having change of Linen. Served they are by the junior Knights in silver; and every Friday by the Great Master, accompanied with the great Crosses. A service obliged unto from the first institution; and thereupon called Knight-Hospitaliers. The Jesuits have of late crept into the City, who now have a Colledge a building. Here be also three Nunneries, the one for Virgins, another for penitent Whores, (of impenitent here are none) and the third for their Bastards.

The barrenness of this Isle is supplied with the fertility of Sicilia, from whence they have their provision. The City is victualled for three years; kept under the ground, and supplied with new, as they spend of the old. They have some fresh water-fountains; and the rain that falleth they reserve in Cisterns. Besides, the Knights and their dependants, the Citizens and Islanders be within the master of their Forces, in which there are not of living souls above twenty thousand. They keep a Court of Guard nightly, and almost every minute of the night the Watch of one Fort gives two or three knolls with a Bell, which is answered by the other in order. The Religion hath only five Gallies; and stinted they are, as I have heard, to that number; (if more, they belong unto private men) and but one Ship. The custom is, or hath been, having hung out a Flag, to lend money to all comers that would dice it; if they win, to repay it with advantage; if lose, to serve until their entertainment amounted to that sum. Now the expectations that they make are little better than for booty: sometimes landing in the night time on the Main of Africa, and surpris-

zing

zing some Village; or scouring along the Coasts, they take certain small Barks, which disburdened of their lading and people, they suffer to hull with the weather. For they make good profit of their Slaves, either employing them in their drudgeries, (they having at this instant above fifteen hundred of them) or by putting them to ransom: for ever and anon you shall have a little Boat, with a Flag of Treaty, come hither from Tripoly, Tunis, and Algiers, to agree for the redemption of Captives; as from the Malteses to those places, who are served with the same measure. During my abode here, there arrived a Bark, brought in by eight English men, who had for a long time served the Turkish Pirates of Tunis: they bound for Algiers, took Weapons in hand, and drove the distraitfuls Turky (being twice as many) into the item, kept there by two, whilst the other dressed the Sails for Malta. Amongst them there was one, who saying he would never be Slave to a Christian, stipp'd himself secretly, and propping up his Gown, and laying his Turbant upon it, as it still there, he dropped in to the Sea. But the deceiver was deceived by the high Land, which seemed nearer than it was; and so wearied with swimming, sunk in their sights. The Inquisition would have seized both on their persons and purchase, because they had served the Infidels: but they were protected by the Great Master (being desirous to serve him) who will not suffer their cruel authority to enter the new City; so that they are fain to reside in Burgo.

The Malteses are little less tawny than the Moors, especially those of the Country, who go half clad, and are indeed a miserable people: but the Citizens are altogether Frenchified; the Great Master, and major part of the Knights being French-men. The Women wear long black Stoles, wherewith they cover their faces (for it is a great reproach to be seen otherwise) who converse not with men, and are guarded according to the manner of Italy. But the jealous are better secured, by the number of allowed Curtizans (for the most part Grecians) who sit playing at their doors on Instruments; and with the art of their eyes inveigle these continent by vow, but contrary by practice, as if chastity were only violated by marriage. They here sit early and late, in regard of the immoderate heat and sleep at noon-day. Their Markets they keep on Sundays.

Now were the Gallies returned with indifferent success; and yet my stay was prolonged by the approaching Festival of their Patron; for until that was past, no Boat would stir out of the Harbour. The Palace, Temples, Alberges, and other principal Houses were stuck round on the outside with Lamps the evening before: and amongst other Solemnities they honoured the day with the discharge of all their Artillery. The Forts put forth their Banners, and every Alberg the Ensign of his Nation, at night having Bonfires before them. Five great ones were made in the Court of the Palace; whercof the first was kindled by the Great Master, the second by the Bishop, the third by the Prior, the fourth and fifth by the Marshal and Admiral. On the four and twentieth of June I departed from Malta in a Falucco of Naples; rowed by five, and not twice so big as a Wherry; yet will the for a space keep way with a Galley. They use to set forth in such Boats as these, two hours before Set-set; and if they discover a suspected Sail between that and night (for the Turky continually lye there in wait) do return again; if not, they proceed, and by the next morning (as now did we) reach the Coasts of Sicilia.

Sicilia, the Queen of the Mediterranean Island, so said to be, not only for her greatness (containing 700 and fourscore miles in circumference) but for her other celebrated excellencies. It beareth the form of a Triangle, and was first called Trinacria of her three Promontories, Pachinus, Pelorus, and Lilybeus; after Sicilia, not (saith Strabo) of the Ligurians Siculi, who expelling the Sicani, inhabited in their rooms, as is for the most part believed; but so called of Siciles, which signifieth cut and selected (as Siles signifieth a stone that is hewn and chosen) in that violently divided from Italy,

Or Seas the earth with sudden waves o're laid,
Or cut; and new shores of the midland made.
Where struggling streams still toil with might and main;
Left flood-torn mountains should unite again:

Qua mare tellurem subitus ait obruit undis
Aut scindit, & medias fecit sibi littora terras.
Vis illic ingens pelagi semperque laborant
Æquora, ne rupi repetant cœlestia montes.
Lucan. l. 3.

Sacred of old unto Ceres and Proserpina; for that

The gleab with crooked plough first Ceres rent;
First gave us corn, a milder nourishment:
First Laws prescribed: ———

Prima Ceres unco glebas dimovit aratro:
Prima dedit fruges alimentaque mitia terris:
Prima dedit leges

Ovid. Met. l. 15.

who are said here first to have inhabited, in regard of the admirable fertility of the soil: the Mountains themselves (whereof it hath many) even to their tops extraordinarily fruitful. Called by Cato the Granary and Nurle of the people of Rome; by Cicero, the treasury and life of the City: and Lucan speaking of it, and Sardinia,

Utraque frugiferis est insula nobilis arvis,
Nec plus Hesperiam longinquis mœffibus ullæ,
Nec Romana magis compleunt horrea terræ.
Ubiæ vis gleba superat celsisimibz Austriis,
Cum medium mæffiones cogente sub ænem,
Lætissimæ Libyæ culti imbribus annuum.
Lucan. l. 3.

Vines, Sugar-canes, Honey, Saffron, and Fruits of all kinds it produceth: Mulberry-trees to nourish their Silk-worms, whereof they make a great income: Quarries of Porphyry and Serpentine: hot Baths, Rivers, and Lakes, replenished with fish; amongst which there is one called Lago de Goridan, formerly the Navel of Sicilia, for that in the middle of the Island, but more anciently Pergus: famous for the fabulous Rape of Proserpina.

—non illo plura Cayster
Carmina cygnorum labentibus audit in undis.
Sylvæ coronat aquas cingens larus omne, fuscæque
Frondibus, ut velo. Phœbeos fummo vet ignes, Frigora dant rati, variis humus humida flores;
Perpetuum ver est.
Ovid. Met. l. 5.

Both Islands famous for Corn-bearing fields,
No foreign soil to Italy more yields,
Nor so the Romans Granaries doth fill;
Nor Libya when the Southern winds are still:
When clouds by Boreas chased, near scorching Zone
Turn to fat showers, more plentiful is known.

Caysters slowly gliding waters bear
Far fewer singing Swans than are heard here.
Wood crowns the lake, and claueth the banks about
With leafy vetils, which Phœbus fires keep out.
The boughs cool shade the moist earth yields rare flowers:
Here heat, nor cold, the lasting spring devours.

In this Island is the far-fcen Mountain of Ætna; the shady Eryx sacred to Venus, that gave unto her the name of Erycia: Hibla clothed with Thyme, and so praised for Honey. In the Sea that watheth the South-West Angle there is a Cordial found at this day. A soft Shrub, green when under the water, and bearing a white Berry,

Duricem tacto capiant ut ab ære, quodque
Vimen in æquore erat, stat super æquora laxum.
Ovid. Met. l. 15.

Hardness assuming from touch'd air alone,
Under the Sea a twig, above a stone.

and changeth into red.

We shall have occasion to treat of the more celebrated Cities in the process of our Journal: now a word or two of the changes it hath suffered in the divers Inhabitants and Governours, and of their present condition. It is said to have been first inhabited by the Cyclopes,

—propago
Conceptrix superum, sævæque avidissima cædis
Et vicenta fuit.
Ovid. Met. l. 1.

Highb Heavens contemners, courtseous of blood,
Most violent—

savage, and exercised in all kinds of impiety, whereupon they were said to war against Heaven; receiving that name from the form of their Beavers, the tight being round, and therefore feigned to have had but one eye, and that in the Forehead. Their bones in sundry places digged up, and at this day to be seen, do give a sufficient testimony of their Giant-like proportions. They have yet an annual Feast at Messena, where they carry about the Statue of two Giants of both Sexes in procession. This Race extinguished, the Sicani succeeded; a people of Spain, so named of the River Sicoris in Catalonia; now Agna naval.

Hesperius intrer Sicoris non ultimus amnis.
Lucan. l. 5.

Not least of the Hesperian streams.

who were expelled by the Siculi, a people of Lygria, and both defended from one Original. After which the Grecians sent thither their Colonies; building sundry Maritime Cities, and incorporated themselves with the Inhabitants. To omit their several Wars and celebrated Tyrants; at length Sicilia having relinquished the Roman amity, to take part with Hannibal, was by Marcellus reduced into the form of a Province; and so held ever after (though not without sundry defections, by the

Roman

Roman and Greek Emperours, until it became a prey unto the Goths in the year 485. together with Italy: who, about seven years after, were expelled out of both by Belisarius and Narses, Lieutenants to the Emperor Justinian. Long after it fell into the hands of the Saracens, by the Treason of Euphemius, a Prince of the people, who having stolen away a certain beautiful Nun, and being pursued by Justice, fled into Africa to the Saracen Amiras, promising to deliver him the Island, so that he would make him King of the same, and to pay a great Tribute yearly; which by his assistance, he effected. But vengeance did swiftly follow; for passing thorough Sicilia in state, and approaching near unto Syracusa, two Brethren of that City upon a sudden motion conspiring his death, and going out with the rest to meet him; as the insinuating Tyrant, bowed his body to every private Saluter, the one of them caught him by the hair, whilst the other struck his head from his shoulders. So got the Saracens the Sovereignty, and for two hundred years kept it. At the end of which time they were expelled by the Normans, conducted by Count Roger. Him Simon succeeded, who not long out-living his Father, left his State to his Brother, a second Roger; whom Pope Innocent the Second by force of Arms would have dispossessed; alleging it to be the Patrimony of St. Peter. But he took both him and his Cardinal Prisoners. Mean while a new Pope was elected at Rome, who to win Count Roger to his Faction, gave him the Title of King (as he had the possession) of both the Sicilia's. William succeeded Roger the Second; whom Adrian the Fourth excommunicated, for with-holding the Goods of the Church, and discharged his Subjects of their Fealty; who reconciled, received the Crown as from him, and from that time forward Sicilia was called St. Peter's Patrimony. Him succeeded William the Second, who left behind him one only Daughter called Constance, and she a Nun. Whereupon, Clement the Third attempted by Arms to have seized the Island; but Tamers the base Son of King Roger (elected King by the Nobles) repulsed him. What force could not, his Successor Celsine, thought to compass by a wife, who getting Constance out of the Nunnery, and dispensing with her Vow, did marry her unto the Emperor Henry the Fourth, upon a condition that he should pay a yearly Pension for the same, and hold it in chief of the Papacy, who shortly after became Lord of the whole. It were tedious to relate how oft (and in what short time) they gave it from one to another; like the Ball of Discord, taken up with much Christian blood-shed. At length Clement the Fourth did give it from Conradine, unto Charles of Anjou, the French Kings Brother, betraying Conradine to the slaughter; who was overcome near Naples in a mortal Battle, and his head stricken off by Clement's appointment. So fell the Germans, and so rose the French-men to the Kingdom of Naples, and both the Sicilia's: But here some seventeen years after they were bid to a bitter Banquet; all slain at the Tole of a Ball throughout the whole Island, which is called to this day the Sicilian Even-song. A just reward (if Justice will countenance to bloody a design) for their intolerable insolencies. The Author of this Massacre was John de Procida, sometime Servant to Manfred, their late slain King. Don Pedro King of Aragon, had married Constance, the only Daughter of Manfred: In whose Right (although Manfred was a Bastard, a Parricide and Usurper) he entered Sicilia in this Tumult, whereunto he was privily crowned King by the general consent of the Sicilians, it continuing in the House of Aragon, until united to Castile. So it remaineth subject unto Spain, and is governed by a Viceroy under the Spanish Council for Italy, which consisteth of three Spaniards and three Italians, the Countable of Castile being President. Who, by the Kings allowance, do institute Governours, Judges, Commanders, and dispose of Titles and Dignities. Sicilia yields to the Coffers of Spain yearly six hundred thousand Ducats, some say, a million: but that and more drawn back again in rewards and payments. There is in it, by computation, about a million of souls. We may conjecture of their force by the Army of Don Garzia of Toledo, consisting of three thousand Horse and ten thousand Foot (and that raised but out of the South Angle of the Island) to defend the large and unfortified Haven of Anguita, if the Turk should have there attempted to land, when he passed by to the invasion of Malta. But what was this, compared with that which we read of Dionysius the elder, being but Lord of Syracusa only, and the adjoining Territories? who kept continually ten thousand Foot-men of his Guard, as many Horse-men, and four hundred Gallies. But now there are but eight maintained about the whole Island. The summit of the lesser Hills are crowned with Towns, and the Coasts beset with Watch-towers throughout; the Seas being seldom free from the Turkish Pirates of Africa.

The Sicilians are quick-witted and pleasant; Epicharmus of that Nation being the first Inventor of Comedies, and Theocritus of Pastoral Eclogues:

Ille ubi septena modulatus arundine carmen
Mulebat lybica, non unquam tempore codem
Siciliæ affuerit effundit in aquora canus.
Scyllari tacuerit canes, fletit æra Charybdis,
Et lætus scopulis audire iohann Cyclops.

Silias Siciliæ. l. 4.

When he with Verse to pipe apply'd, did please
Even rude Woods, then in Syren song to Sea;
Scilla's dogs bark'd not, black Charybdis foud
The joyful Cyclop list'ned whilst he play'd.

Empedocles doth shew their excellency in Philosophy; Euclide and Archimedes in the Mathematics. A people greedy of honour, yet given to ease and delight; talkative, meddling, dissentious, jealous, and revengeful. They have their Commodities fetch'd from them by Foreigners, with all the profit: who traffick little abroad, and are (though seated in the midst of the Sea) unexpert Navigators. So supinely idle, that they sell their Sugar as it is extracted from the Cane, to the Venetians; and buy what they spend of them again, when they have refined it. The Duke of Osimo is now Viceroy, who keeps his Court at Palermo, the ancient Seat of the Sicilian Kings styled the happy, for the delightful situation, now adorned with goodly Buildings: and frequented by Students. It is seated on the North-side of the Island, having naturally no Port, yet one lately made by a mighty Peer: a work of great expence, and no small admiration. This Viceroy hath well purged the Country of Banditties, by pardoning of one for the bringing in or death of another; who did exceedingly, and yet do so much infect it. Besides, the upland Inhabitants are so inhospitable to strangers, that between them both, there is no travelling by Land without a strong guard; who rob and murder whomsoever they can conveniently lay hold on. Their Religion is Roman (yet are they not so few as ten thousand who are of the tolerated Greek Church.) Palermo, Messina, and Mamroyat, have their Archbishops. The Bishops of Agrigento, Mazara, and Malta, being under the first: the second hath Patti, Cefaludi, and Lipari; the third Syracusa. The Bishop of Canania is under none of them. There be in this Island seven Princes, four Dukes, thirteen Marquesses, fourteen Earls, one Viscount, and eight and forty Barons. The chief of the ancient Sicilian Nobility attend in the Court of Spain; a course of life rather politically commanded than elected.

June 25. having compassed Cape Passaro, defended by a strong Fortres not long since erected, we rowed close under the Cliff called Muro del Porco, (in that those flat Rocks do resemble the snouts of Swine) where shore of Tunny is taken. A fish that is bred, (as hath been said before) in the Lake of Mazur, but groweth unto his greatness in the Ocean, when about the midst of May they return again into these Seas. They cut them in pieces, salt them, barrel them up, and do vend them unto most places of Europe; esteemed heretofore a vile food.

Quod vocis prethum? sicus pers fusculus, & vas
Palamidum, aut veteres Aforum Epimenia balbi.
Jov. Sat. 7.

What's thy tongue see? Dry Gammons, a base dish
Of Tunny, mombly presents of state fish.

and so is my judgment, in taste something resembling flesh, as in colour and solidity. I have read or heard how certain Merchants being bound to serve the French Army at the Siege of Naples, with so many Tun of Tunny, and not able to perform it; hearing of a late fought Battel in Barbary, repaired to the place, and supplied the quantity with mans flesh dress'd in the same manner; which proved so over-high a feeding (most easily converting into the like) that their bodies brake forth into loathsome Ulcers: and from that infection the disease that taketh from them the name (not known before in our parts of the World) was introduced amongst us. And Scaliger in his 181 Exercise upon Candian, and the 19. Section, doth also affirm, that it proceeded not originally from the impurity of Women, but from contagion; and that the Spaniards did first transport these rare Wares from the Indians; as common amongst them as the Meazles amongst us, and equally contagious. Which seemeth to affirm the former assertion; they having been Man-eaters for the most part. No Tunny is suffered to be sold at Venice, unless first discask'd, and search'd to the bottom. The story goes, how the Genoa's having seized on a part of Venice, and driven the Venetians into their houses; a Woman running to a Window to behold the Tumult, by chance threw down a Mortar of Brals, which lightning upon the head of their General, struck him dead on the earth. Whereupon, discomfited, the Genoaes retired in such haste, that they left a number of their men behind them; who saved themselves for a time by mingling with the Venetians, being not to be distinguished by Habit, Language, Favour, nor Behaviour. At length all generally were commanded to ascend an high Tower, where (not unlike as the Gileadites saved the Ephraimites) a sheep being for before them, they were compelled to name it. So being distinguished (the name differing in their Dialect) they were thrown down headlong. The Genoaes having after taken certain of their Gallies, wherein were the prime of their Gentry, in revenge of that cruelty, caused them to be cut in pieces, and dress'd like Tunny; nailing their hands to the bottom with Scedules of Tin containing their names, and so sent it thither to be sold, who bought, and almost had devoured it all, before it was discovered. But I have this only by relation. Still winding with the shore, we entered at length the Haven of Syracusa; and together with the Sun, made an end of that days Journey.

of

Archias not daring to return unto Corimb, having unnaturally abused a Youth of honest behaviour, embarked himself with certain Corimbians and Dorians, and came, together with Myfellus, unto Delphos, to consult with the Oracle. Demanded by Apollo, whether it were Riches or Sanity, that they affected; Myfellus said, Sanity and Archias Riches. Whereupon he commanded the one to erect Crotona, and the other Syracusa; which he did in the second year of the second Olympiad. Where they in short time grew to wealthy by the fertility of the Soil, and benefit of the Haven, that it became a Proverbial scoff unto the too sumptuous, that they were not worth the Riches of Syracusa. Archias slain by Telyphus, whom he had formerly defiled; the Citizens converted the Government into an Aristocracy. But the Nobles, by a Law that they had made, as jealous that some of them should have affected the Tyranny, exiled one another; so that the Commons assumed the Government. After, to accord a dangerous Sedition, they chose Gelon for their Tyrant, in the year of our Lord 3474. Hiron succeeded Gelon the good; his cruelty tempered by the instructions of Pindarus and Simonides. Telyphus his Successor was expelled by the Syracussians for his oppression; and the State again reduced into a Democracy; until threescore years after, it was usurped by Dionysius, a man admirably valiant. Dionysius his Son succeeded as execrably vicious, (although both the Hearers of Plato) who overthrown by Dion and Timoleon, was sent unto Corimb, where he lived in great poverty. So recovered the Syracussians their liberty; but had not enjoyed it above twenty years, when Agathocles (a man of a base Original) did make them sloop to a cruel subjection. He dead, and after much civil diffention, they make choice of Hieron, the second of that name; most beautiful in body, and as beautiful in mind; whose prosperous Government lasted fifty years, being a friend to the Romans. Hieronimus his Son, within fifteen months after the death of his Father, was slain by his Guard. Now as for the Syracussians, although subject themselves to these Tyrants, yet were they the masters of others; and when free, delivered many from the servitude of the Barbarous. Memorable are the fights which they had with the Athenians and Carthaginians; and glorious their Victories.

Portus æquoreis fuerat insignire trophæis
Sil. Ital.

Still maintaining their own, until the fore-named Hieronimus sided with the Carthaginians; and they after him, against the Romans: who under the Conduct of Marcellus, sacked their City; defended for three years by the special labour and miraculous Engines of Archimedes, that excellent Mathematician, Inventor of the Sphere.

When Jove within a little glass survey'd
The heavens, he smil'd; and so the Gods thus said:
Can strength of mortal wit proceed thus far?
In a frail Orb my works presented are,
Hither the Syracussians art transfused
Heaven form, the course of things; and humane feats
Th' included spirit serv'd by star-deck'd signs,
The living work, incessant motion winds.
Th' adulterate Zodiac runs a vital year,
And Cymbias farg'd born mombly new lights bear.

Jupiter in parvo cum cerneret æthere vitro
Ritus, et ad superos talia dicta dedit:
Hucine mortalitatis progreſſu potentia curæ?
Iam meus in fragili ladicur orbe labor.
Iura poli, rerumque fides, legeque viroſum
Ecce Syracusæ transiſſe arte tenex,
Inclusus variis famularur spiritibus æther,
Et vivum certis motibus urget opus.
Percurrat proprium, temitur hincit annus;
Et simulata novo Cynthia mente redit.

Viewing

Jamque sum volvens aude industria mundum,
Gaudet, & humana sidera mente regit.
Quid falso innotem votis Salmona miror?
Æmula Naturæ parva reperta manus.
C. n. d. in Epig.

When the City was taken, a Souldier found him in his Study, busie about certain Geometrical proportions; who ready to strike, was delir'd by him a little to stay until he had perfected his demonstration. Who forthwith flew him, offended with his answer, to the much grief of Marcellus; who not only spared his Kinsfolks for his sake, but had them in great honour.

Syracusa, in times past, contained four conjoyning Cities, environed with a Wall of two and twenty miles in circuit; Ortygia, Acradina, and Tyche; besides, a firing Fort called Hexaple, high mounted, and over-looking the whole. Seated it is on a rocky point of Land, which divides the two Havens. Ortygia stands at the uttermost extent; an Island joyn'd by a Bridge to the rest. Wherein is the so charmed Fountain of Arethusa, once a Nymph of Acradia, (as they fable) beloved of the River Alpheus, and turned into a Spring by Diana, for safeguard of her chastity; being conducted by her under Seas and Earth, and re-ascending in this Island. Followed notwithstanding by the Lover.

Sicanio prætexta sine jacet insula contra
Plemmyrium undosum: nomen dixere priores
Ortygium, Alpheum fama est: huc Elidis amnem
Occultas egisse vias subter mare, qui nunc
Ore Arethusa tot Scabris confunditur undis.
Æn. l. 3.

Against Plemmyrium in Sicilian Bay,
There lies an Isle, earst call'd Ortygia.
Hither Alpheus under-seas (same goes)
From Elis straid; and as thy mouth arose
Lov'd Arethuse: from whence to Seas he flows.

They fo conjecturing, for that this Fountain was said to grow thick, and favour of Garbidge, at such time as they celebrated the Olympiads, and defiled the River with the blood and entrails of the Sacrifices. But Strabo derides the conceit, though (besides divers more ancient Authors) it be affirmed by Seneeca and others. The Fountain is ample, and sendeth to the adjoining Sea a plentiful tribute. Before, and even in the days of Diodorus the Sicilian, a number of sacred fishes were nourished herein; so said to be, for that whosoever did eat of them (though in time of War) were afflicted with sundry calamities. Now the North-side of the rest of the City was Neapolis, the South-side Acradina, and the West-end Tyche, which stretcheth far into the Land, so named of the Temple of Fortune. As for the Castle Hexaple, it stood further off upon the summit of a Rock; which Cicero doth call the great and magnificent labour of Tyrants: consisting of solid stone, and raised of a wonderful height, more strong than which there could be nothing made, or almost imagined. All being defaced by Marcellus, and suffering a further destruction by Pompey. Syracusa may yet say,

Illa ego sum Romæ laboraque injuria Perii:
Pro me etiam tragis Græcia sensit onus:
Fugere quæ voluere aliis in lœdibus arma:
Exurbata jacent sedibus orba Iuis.
J. C. Scal.

Of Rome th' excessive toil, the scourge of Carthage
Am I: for me Greece also felt Wars rage,
Th' Ensigns they would in foreign seats have shewn,
Now hurl'd out, lie deprived of their own.

But Augustus Cæsar sent hither a Colony, and rebuilt a great part of that which lies next to Ortygia, with the Isle it self; whereon now there standeth a strong Castle possessing the whole compass of the Island, divided by a deep Trench (but not by the Sea) from the rest of the City. The City it self is strongly walled, (than which heretofore there was nothing more goodly) not far removed on both sides from the Sea: the point whereon it doth stand being but narrow towards the West, and so maketh by Land a difficult approach; without which are the ruins of the old City. The principal Gate is on the South-side, and near the West-end, over which is written,

SYRACUSA CIVITAS INVICTISSIMA, DEO ET REGI FIDELISSIMA.

the City being styled, Syracusa the Faithful. The Garrison consists of two hundred Spaniards, and three hundred Townsmen; besides certain Horsemen of the Country adjoining, who serve by turns, and are nightly sent forth to scour and guard the Sea-coast. The Buildings of the City are ancient, the Inhabitants grave, and their Women hid under long black Stoles, not unlike the Maltises. The Winter is here most temperate, no day so tempestuous as affordeth not some Sun-shine; but again they are afflicted with the intolubrious heat of the Summer. Yet in the hottest season cool Springs gush out of the Rock (not to speak again of Arethusa) both within the Walls of the City and without: and that so near unto the Sea, that the salt doth mingle with the fresh upon every motion. Notwithstanding, there is a long ancient Aqueduct, which conveyeth waters from the nearer Mountains (yet reaching short of the City) wherewith the City is principally furnished. The two Havens that wash the South and North-sides of the City, (which by the inclining of the two opposite Promontories towards Ortygia, are defended from all weathers) do resemble in form a figure of 8. The greatest lies towards the South, the most goodly and most famous, that ever Nature or Art had a hand in; into which the little and gentle Anapio doth discharge it self, joyning not far above with the Fountain Cyane, whose conjunction hath given invention to their celebrated Loves and Nuptials.

recn

Having stayed a day at Syracusa, we put again to Sea, and arrived before night at Catania the Renowned. A City more ancient than beautiful; seated on the North-side of a great, but shallow Bay, and therefore not to be approached by Ships; the cause perhaps that it is not kept by a Garrison. Once it was a Colony of the Naxians. But Hieron the first displanted the old Inhabitants, and peopled it with other; changing also the name thereof into Ætna. He is said to have built it anew; but after the death of the Tyrant, the Catanienses recovered their City, overthrew his Monument, defaced his Titles, and again did call it Catania. Little is here note-worthy, more than that it is an University, and seated on a soil that aboundeth with all things. They have little Trading, and therefore the more inhabited by Gentlemen. Of late, not far from the City, and Image of our Lady was under earth (as they say) accidentally found; whose imputed Miracles have got her already much fame, but not yet a Temple: contented, until enriched by the tribute of their zeal, with a Canvas Pavillion. This City doth well-nigh joyn to the skirts of Ætna, whereby it receiveth both loss, and (if Strabo may be believed) advantage. For the ejected flames have heretofore committed horrible wastes, which gave Amphinomus and Anapio, two Brethren, an occasion to become famous for their piety; who rescued their Parents engaged by the fire, and bare them away on their shoulders; whereof Silius Italicus,

Catania too near Ætna; honoured,
In this it two such pious brethren bred.

—Catine nimium ardenti vicina Typhæo,
Et generasse pios quondam celeberrima fratres.
Lib. 13.

and Ansonius,

Who will forget Catania? of high fame
For piety of brothers sing'd in flame.

Quis Catinam fileat? —
Hanc ambulatorum fratrum pietate celebrem.
Clar. Urb. 10.

And even at this day, once in three or four years, it falleth in great flakes on the Country below, to the terror of the Inhabitants, and destruction of their Vintage. But on the contrary side (according to that Author) the ashes thereof doth so enrich the soil, that both Vines and Corn there prosper above admiration. Who reports besides, that the Grass so manured kills the Sheep that do feed thereon, unless within forty or fifty days they be let blood in the Ear. Howbeit, at this day much ground about it lies waste, by means of the ejected Pumice. Greatly desirous I was to have ascended this Mountain, but it required much time; besides, the Country hereabout is daily foraged by Thieves, who lurk in a Wood of eight miles compass, that neighbours the City. So the next morning we departed, and failed for the space of thirty miles about the East skirts of that Mountain; whereof we now will make a Description.

Ætna, called by Pindarus the Celestial Column, is the highest Mountain of Sicilia, for a great space leisurely rising; inasmuch as the top is ten miles distant from the uttermost Basis. It appeareth this way with shoulders, having an eminent eminent head in the middle. The lower parts are luxuriously fruitful, the middle woody, and the upper rocky, steep, and almost covered with snow; yet smoking in the midst like many conjoining Chimnies, and vomiting intermitted flames, though not but by night to be discerned, as if heat and cold had left their contention, and embraced one another. This burning Beacon doth throw her fire by night: and her smোক by day, a wonderful way off; yet heretofore discerned far further, in that the matter perhaps is diminished by so long an expanse. My Elf have seen both plainly unto Malta: and the Mountain it self is to be discovered an hundred and fifty miles off by the Sailor. Those that have been at the top do report, that there is there a large Plain of Cinders and Ashes, environed with a brow of the same; and in the midst a Hill of like substance, out of which bursted a continual wind hangs about it like a great low cloud; and often hurling forth stones and cinders. Wherefore the story of Empedocles the Sicilian Philosopher, then whom

— Nil hoc habuisse viro præclarus in se,
Nec sanctum magis, & mirum carumque videtur,
Carmina quin etiam divini pectoris ejus
Vociferantur & exponunt præclara reperta;
Hic vix humana videtur fuisse creatus.
Lucr. l. i.

Is by some called into question. Who (as they say) affecting divine honour, withdrew himself privately from his Companions, and leapt in at the mouth thereof, but was revealed by his brazen shoes, which the fire had thrown up again. For it is impossible to be approached, by reason of the violent wind, the suffocating smোক, and consuming fervour. But hear we Virgil's description:

— horrifici—tonat Æna iuvis:
Interdumque atram prorumpit ad æthera nubem
Turbinis fumantem picco, & cadente favilla,
Atollitque globos flammarum, & sidera lambit,
Interdum scopulos avallaque vilicora montis
Erigit eructans, liquelactaque fæxa sub auras
Cum gemitu glomerat, lundoque ex æstus timo,
Fama est Encladus ingentem fulmine corpus
Urgeri mole hac ingentemque insuper Ætnam
Imposuistam, ruptis flammam expirare caminis.
Ereclum quoties moveat latus, intremere omnem
Curvare Trimeriam, & cælum subtere fumo.
Æn. l.

But leave we Fables with their Allegories, and come to the true reason; given (if fully) by Lucretius.

—Primum totius subcava montis
Est natura, fere silicem, subtilia cavernis,
Omnibus est porro in speluncis ventus & aer.
Ventus enim sit ubi est agitando percussus aer.
Hic ubi percolat, calefactique omnia circum,
Saxa lutescunt, qua contingit terramque & ab ollis
Excutit calidum flammis velocibus ignem:
Tollit se, ac reclusa ita faucibus ejicit alce,
Fumitque ardorem longe, longoque favillam
Differt, & crassa volvit caligine fumum;
Extraducte simul mirando pondere saxa:
Ne dubites quin hæc animalia turbida sit vis:
Præterea magna ex parte mare montis ad ejus
Radices frangit fluctus, æstusque resorbet,
Et hoc uique mari speluncæ montis ad altas
Atque efflue foras: ideoque extollere flammam,
Saxaque subvertare, & ærenæ tællere nimbus.

Lib. 6.

More excellent in nothing hath brought forth,
More sacred, wonderful, or of more worth:
His Vorse divinely fram'd, aloud resound
Natures deep mysteries by him ont found,
As if not of ambunane off-spring born:

Ætna here thunders with an horrid noise,
Sometimes black clouds coarseth to skies,
Fuming with pitchy curls, and sparkling fires:
Toss'd up globes of flames, to Stars aspire.
Now belching rocks, the mountains entrails torn
And groaning burles out liquid flames, thence born
Throw th' air in showers, and from the bottom gloes
Encladus, with lightning struck (same goes)
This mass o'rewhelms: wth under Ætna laid,
Expir'd flames, by broken vents come'd.
As often as he turns his wroty sides,
All Sicil quakes: and smোক days beauty hides.

Hollow the mountain is throughout, alone
Supported well-nigh with huge caves of stone,
No cave but is with wind and air repeat;
For agitated air doth wind beget.
Which beats the imprisoning rocks, when hot it grows
The earth chaf'd by his fury: and from those Strides forth fire and swift flame: it self on high
It mounts, and out at upright jaws doth flie:
And fire sheds a far off, far off dead coals:
Transports: and fumes in misty darkness roles.
Ejcting stones withal of wondrous size,
All which from strength of struggling winds arise.
Besides, against the Mountains roots the Main
Breaks her swollen waves, and swallows them again.
From whence unto the summit of the ascent
The undermining caves have their extent:
Through which the billows break, & flames out-thrust
With forced stones, and dark'ning showers of dust.

Besides,

Besides, Ætna is full of Sulphur and Bitumen, apt to be kindled, and so is all Sicilia, the principal reason that it is so fertile. This Mountain hath flamed in times past so abundantly, that by reason of the smোক and air involved with burning sand, the Inhabitants hereabout could not see one another (if we may give credit to Cicero) for two days together. The extraordinary eruption thereof hath been reputed ominous. For so it did after the death of Cæsar; when not only the Cities thereabout were diminished thereby, but divers in Calabria. And in the year of the World 3982, hard before the servile Wars in Sicilia, wherein threefore and ten thousand Slaves were slain by the Prætors, it raged so violently, that Africa was thereof almost witness.

Hereabouts inhabited the Cyclops, and here Acis hastes to the Sea.

The Rival of thy ardor, Polyphemus,
Flying from savage rage, into a stream
Resolv'd did both escape his foe, and joy,
O Galatea, his joy'd waves with thine.

Æmilus ille tuo quondam Polypheme calori,
Dum fugit agrestem violenti pectoris iram,
In tenues liquefactus aquas evasit & hostem.
Et tibi victicem, Galatæa, immiscuit undam.
Sil. Ital. 13.

Northward of Ætna, lesser Hills do arise in the neck one of another, all along the Sea-coast, fruitful to their top: whereupon stand Castles and Towns, of such an height and steepness, as you would hardly think that they were to be ascended. Upon the nine and twentieth of June, betimes in the morning, entering the Streets, between Sicilia and Calabria, we turned on the left hand into the Haven of Messena.

Messena (now Messina the Noble) was at the first called Zancle, of the crookedness of the place, which signifieth a Cycle, built by the Pirates of Cæcilia, for the better execution of their robberies: when Anaxilas, Tyrant of the opposite Rhegium, drew to him the Messeni of Peloponnesus, to displace the Zancii. So the Rhegians having overthrown them by Sea, and the Messinians by Land, and entered their City, they were enforced to flie unto their Temples and Altars, when Anaxilas would have put them to the sword, but Manticles and Gorgus, Captains of the Messinians, dissuaded him from being so cruel unto a Greek people, who originally were of their blood and alliance: whereupon they raised them from the Altars, and plighting faith unto one another, inhabited it together. So it came to be called Messina. This befell in the nine and twentieth Olympiad. But in the time of Dionysius the elder it was razed by the Carthaginian Himileus, and that with such hatred, as he left not to much as the ruins. About the beginning of the first Punick Wars, the Mamertini, a people of Campania, sent hither their Colonies, who posselt the place, and rebuilt the City; which was called for a long time after, rather Mamertinum: as the excellent Wines that grow hereabout are called by Martial.

If cups of old Mamertian Wine they fill,
Give it you may what name soe'er you will.

Amphora Nestora tibi Mamertina senecta,
Si detur, quodvis nomen habere potest.
Lib. 3. Ep. 1. 17.

The Romans made it their refuge in the Sicilian Wars against the Carthaginians, with whom it stood and fell, as did the whole Islands. It is seated on the West side and South-end (which is the bottom of a Bay) having behind it high Hills, whereof it ascendeth a part, strongly walled, and fortified about with Bulwarks, greater or less, according to the places necessity. Upon the West-side, and high mounted above it, stands a strong Citadel, which commandeth the whole City, manned by a Garrison of Spaniards. South-West of it a Fortrefs is mounted on the top of a higher Hill. And on the top of another towards the South, is the Castle of Gonfage, both without the Walls. The City is garnished with beautiful Buildings, both publick and private. Venus, Neptune, Calor and Pollux, had here their Temples, whose ruins are now the foundation of Christian Churches. Divers ancient Statues are yet to be seen. Throughout the City there are Fountains of fresh water: and towards the North-end, the ruins of an old Aqueduct. In that end which turns to the East, about the bottom of the Bay, where the City is slender, and free from concurrence of people, stands the Viceroys Palace, of no mean building, environed with delightful Gardens and Orchards, to which the Arsenal adjoyneth. This end of the City points upon Calabria, and extendeth almost to the Sea; where the Land in a narrow slip running on the North, and then returning West towards the rest of the City in form of a Cycle, doth make a large and admirable Haven. Now on the midst of this Cycle of Land, there standeth au high high Lanthorn, which by light in the night directeth such Ships as are to enter these dangerous freights : North of which there are certain late built dry stations for Gallies ; and not far beyond the Lanthorn, where it beginneth to turn, is a very strong Castle (built by Philip the Second) and guarded by Spaniards. The rest of that Cycle is inclosed between two Walls, to the very point which is fortified with a Bulwark ; between which and the City, the Haven which opens to the North, hath a spacious entrance. Here live they in all abundance and delicacy, having more than enough of Food, and Fruits of all kinds ; excellent Wines, and Snow in the Summer to qualifie the heat thereof, at a contemptible rate. The better fort are Spaniards in attire ; and the meanest Artificers Wife is clothed in silk : whereof an infinite quantity is made by the Women, and a part thereof wrought into Stuffs (but rudely) by the Workman. Eight thousand Bails of raw Silk are yearly made in that Island, and five thousand thereof fetched from them (for, as hath been said before, they will not trouble themselves to transport it) at the publick Mart here kept, which lasteth all August, by the Gallies of Naples, Ostia, Ligorn, and Genova ; during which time they are quitted from Customs. The Gentlemen put their monies into the common Table (for which the City stands bound) and receive it again upon their Bills, according to their uses. For they dare not venture to keep it in their houses, so ordinarily broken open by Thieves (as are the Shops and Ware-houses) for all their cross-bar'd Windows, Iron Doors, Locks, Bolts, and Bars on the inside ; wherein, and in their private revenges, no night doth pass without murder. Every evening they solace themselves along the Marine (a place left throughout between the City-wall and the Haven) the men on Horse-back, and the Women in large Carosses, being drawn with the slowest procession. There is to be seen the pride and beauties of the City. There have their Play-houses, where the parts of Women are acted by Women, and too naturally passionated ; which they forbear not to frequent upon Sundays. The Duke of Osuna, their new Viceroy, was here daily expected ; for whom a sumptuous landing place was made, and that but to continue for a day.

The Phare of Messina (for so these freights are now called, the Lanthorn that stands on the point of Pelorus) is ten miles long, and against Messina but a mile and a half over. Inmuch that when Himilce took the City, a number saved their lives (although it ran with an impetuous Current) by swimming into Italy. On the Coast of Sicily is Charybdis.

——— Levam implacata Charybdis,
Obfudet, arque imo barathri ter gurgite vastos
Sorbet in abruptum fluitans, rursusque subauras
Erigit alternos, & sydera verberata unda.
Virg. Æn. l. 3.

Gulphy Charybdis doth the left side keep,
And thrice sucky to the bottom of her deep
The soiling floods ; an often lifts on high
Alternate waves, and beats the approached ship.

Once, as they fable, a ravenous Woman, smuck with Lightning by Jupiter, and thrown into the Sea, for stealing of Hercules Oxen ; who still retaining her former nature, devoureth all that comes near her. This Whirl-pit is said to have thrown up her Wracks near Tauromenia ; which is between it and Catania. Then surely by much more outrageous than now, and more dangerous to the Sailer, by reason of their unskilfulness. As now, during our passage, so heretofore, it was smooth and appeared whilst calm weather lasted ; but when the winds begin to ruffle (especially from the South) it forthwith runs round with violent eddies : so that many Vessels by the means thereof do miscarry. Right against this Charybdis stands that former Lanthorn on the neck of the Haven, whereof Sealiger speaketh in the person of Messina.

Indomitæ sedeo spectatrix tuta Charybdis,
Oliendique alius lumine grata viam.
Morales si sic faciunt, meliore fruatur
Numine : nunc homini vera Charybdis homo.
J. C. Scal.

Unsafe Charybdis safely I survey:
And others shew with friendly light the way.
More would heaven smile on earth, did mortals so :
Man is to man Charybdis, his worst foe,

The stream thorow this freight runneth towards the Ionian Sea, whereof a part fetcheth into the Haven, which turning about, and meeting with the rest, makes so violent an encounter, that Ships (if the wind be not good) are glad to prevent the danger, by coming to an Anchor.

Almost right against Messina stands Rhegium in Italy ; a Garrison Town, retaining his his ancient name, which signifieth Broken ; in memory of the division of this Island from the Continent.

By force, and with vast breaches torn, this place,
(Such power hath time to alter through long space)
Of old (as said) of under brake ; before
Both but one land : Seas throng'd between, and bore
Sicil from Italy ; and making spoil
Of fields and towns, shorow narrow freights now soil.

Hæc loca vi quondam, & vasta convulsa ruinas
(Tantum ævi longinqua valet mutare vetustas)
Difficile ferunt : cum protinus utraque tellus
Una foret : venit medio vi Pontus, & undis
Hæpserunt Siculo latus abscondit, arvasq; & urbes
Littore Siculæ angusto interluit æstu.
Virg. Æn. l. 3.

Separated by Earth-quakes, or (which is most likely) by the continual assaults of the Tyrrhene and Ionian Sea : the Land being but low, and the water so shallow, that a Ship may anchor in the deepest. Some think it to have been cut by the labour of man ; but the crookedness of the Bays and unequal breadth, do confute that conjecture.

Now having stayed three days at Messina ; on the first of July I departed, accompanied by two Spaniards of the Garrison of Rhegium, in another Felluca that belonged to the City. Having crossed the Phare, and rowed along the Calabrian shore for the space of five miles towards the Tyrrhene Sea, we were encountered by so strong a stream, that much ado we had to hale the Boat against it. At length the Rope brake, and in an instant we were carried a great way off : when they might have sought her in the bottom of the Sea, if she had not met with her succour. That night we came unto Scylla, which is not past twelve miles distant from Messina : seated in the midst of a Bay, upon the neck of a narrow Mountain which thrusts it self into the Sea ; having at the uppermost end a steep high Rock whereon there standeth a Castle. This is the Rock so celebrated by the Poets : whose unaccessible height is so hyperbolically described by Homer, and was so obnoxious to the Mariner.

But Scylla lurking in dark caves, displays
Her face, and ships to crushing rocks betrays.
A Virgin to the twist divinely fram'd,
Her sister parts with shape of Monster fram'd,
Deform'd with womb of Wolves and Dolphins tails.

At Scyllam crebris cohibet spelunca latebris
Ora exsertantem & naves in saxa trahentem.
Prima hominis facies, & pulchro pectore virgo
Pube tenus : postrema immani corpore pistris,
Delphinum caudas utero commissa luporum.
Virg. Æn. l. 3.

She was feigned to be the Daughter of Phorcus, begotten on the Nymph Cretiside ; being Cyrces Rival in the love of Glaucus. By whom preferred, the envious Witch infected this place with Weeds and Enchantments : when Scylla entering herinto to bathe, was transformed into that monstrous resemblance. But she was revenged of her affected Ulysses :

Who hemm'd about with barking Monsters wrack'd
Dulcibian Ships, and in her swallowing flood
To Sea-dogs gave his fearful men for food.

——— aut quam fama secuta est
Candida succinctam latrantibus inguinis monstros
Dulichias vexante rates, & gurgite in alto
Ab timidus natans, canibus lacerasse marinis.
Virg. Æn. l. 8.

and after that was turned into a stone. And no doubt, but the Fable was fitted to the place ; there being divers little sharp Rocks at the foot of the greater (the Dogs that bark with the noise that is made by the repercussed waters) frequented by Lamprons, and greater fishes that devoured the bodies of the drowned. But Scylla is now without danger, the Current at this day not setting upon it. And wonder I do at this Proverbial Verse,

Who fears Charybdis upon Scylla falls.

Incidit in Scyllam qui vult vitare Charybdim.

when there are twelve miles distant from each other. I rather conjecture that within these freights there have been divers Charybdis's occasioned by the receding streams. As one there is between the South-end of this Bay of Scylla, and the opposite point of Sicily (whereon standeth the ancient Pharus) there the jutting waves make a violent eddy : which, when the winds are rough, doth more than threaten destruction to the engaged Ships, as I have heard of the Sicilians : when seeking perhaps heretofore to avoid the then more impetuous turning, they have been driven by the weather upon the not far distant Scylla. By the Marine in Messina there is a Fountain of white Marble, where stands the Statue of Neptune holding Scylla and Charybdis in chains : with these under-written Verses.

Impia nodosis cohobetur Scylla catenis;
Pergite secure per freta nostra rates,
Capta est prædatrix Siculicæ infamia ponti,
Nec fremic in mediis læva Charybdis aquis.

*Fall-binding fetters wicked Scylla hold,
Sail safely sharrow our freights, brave Ships behold,
Th' infamous thief that kept these Seas is tame,
And fell Charybdis rageth now in vain.*

West of Sicilia in the Tyrrhene Sea, but South, and within sight of this place, are the Æolian Islands, so called of Æolus Hipporades charus immortalibus diis.

Rom. Od. l. 10.

Æolus Hippotades
Dear t' immortal Deities.

for such was his piety, he being Lord of them. He taught at first the use of the Sail; and by observing of the fire and smoke that ascended from those Islands, (for heretofore they all of them flamed) prognosticated of storms to come; and therefore was called the Sovereign of the Winds. Of these were seven (but now are eleven) almost of an equal magnitude. Yet Liparia is the greatest (being ten miles in circuit) as also the most famous, to which the other were subject: fruitful, and abounding with Bitumen, Sulphur, and Allum, having also hot Baths much frequented by the dilaicd. In the year 1544, it was depopulated by the Turk: but Charles the Fifth replanted it with Spaniards, and fortified the place. The fire here went out about an Age ago, having (as it is to be supposed) consumed the matter that fed it. Vulcano and Strombolo (of which we will only speak) do now only burn. Vulcano receiveth that name from his nature, consecrated formerly to Vulcan, and called his mansion. It is said but first to have appeared above water, about the time that Scipio Africanus died. A barren Island, stony and uninhabited. It had three Tunnels whereto it evaporated fire; but now hath but one, out of which it smoketh continually, and casts out stones with a horrible roaring. In the year of our Lord 1444, on the fifth of February, it flamed out abundantly, and flung forth fire and stones with such an hideous noise, that not only the Islands, but also Sicilia trembled thereat. Perhaps the last blaze; for now flame it doth not, but retaineth the rest of his terrors. Now Strombolo, called formerly Strongyle, of the roundity thereof (for all is no other than a high round Mountain) doth burn almost continually at the top of a Beacon, and exceeding clearly: so that by night it is to be discerned a wonderful way. These places (and such like) are commonly affirmed by the Roman Catholics to be the Jaws of Hell: and that within, the damned Souls are tormented. It was told me at Naples by a Country-man of ours, and an old Pensioner of the Popes, who was a Youth in the days of King Henry, that it was then generally bruted throughout England, that Mr. Gresham a Merchant sitting sail from Palermo, (where there then dwelt one Antonio called the Rich, who at one time had two Kingdoms mortgaged unto him by the King of Spain, being crossed by contrary winds, was constrained to anchor under the lee of this Island: now about mid-day, when for certain hours it accidentally forbore to flame; he ascended the Mountain, with eight of the Sailers; and approaching as near the vent as they durst, amongst other noises they heard a voice cry aloud, dispatch, dispatch, the rich Antonio is a coming. Terrified herewith they descended, and anon the Mountain again evaporated fire. But from so dismal a place they made all the haste that they could: when the winds still thwarting their course, and desiring much to know more of this matter, they returned to Palermo. And forthwith inquiring of Antonio, it was told them that he was dead; and computing the time, did find it to agree with the very instant that the voice was heard by them. Gresham reported this at his return to the King: and the Mariners being called before him, confirmed by oath the narration. In Gresham himself, as this Gentleman said (for I no otherwise report it) it wrought to deep an impression, that he gave over all traffick, distributing his goods, a part to his Kinsfolks, and the rest to good uses, retaining only a competency for himself: and so spent the rest of his life in a solitary devotion.

All the day following we stayed at Scylla, the winds not favouring us. My Spanish Comrades were very harsh to me, (for in these parts they detest the English, and think us not Christians) but when upon their demand I told them that I was no Lutheran, they exceeded on the other side in their courtesie. One of them had been in the Voyage of eighty eight; and would say that it was not we, but the winds that overthrew them. On the third of July we departed, and landed that night at Auphage. Hereabout (as throughout this part of Calabria) are great store of Tarantula's, a Serpent peculiar to this Country; and taking that name from the City of Tarentum. Some hold hold them to be of the kind of Spiders others of Effis: but they are greater than the one, and less than the other, and (if that were a Tarantula which I have seen) not greatly resembling either. For the head of this was small, the legs slender and knotty, the body light, the tail spiny, and the colour dun, intermixed with spots of a filled white. They lurk in Sinks and Privies, and abroad in slimy slith between furrows; for which cause the Country-people do reap in Boats. The sting is deadly, and the contrary operations thereof most miraculous. For some fo slumber, are still oppressed with a leaden sleep; others are vexed with continual waking, some fling up and down, and others are extremely lazy. He sweats, a second vomits, a third runs mad. Some weep continually, and some laugh continually, and that is the most usual. Inasmuch, that it is an ordinary saying to a man that is extraordinary merry, that he hath been stung by a Tarantula. Hereupon not a few have thought, that there are as many kinds of Tarantula's, as several affections in the affected. But as over-liberal cups do not work with all in one manner; but according to each mans nature and constitution; some weep, some laugh, some are tongue-ty'd, some are all tongue, some sleep, some leap over tables, some kiss, and some quarrel: even to it falls out with those that are bitten. The merry, the mad, and otherwise actively disposed, are cured by Mullick; at least it is the cause, in that it incites them to dance indefatigably: tor by labour and sweat the poison is expelled. And Mullick also by a certain high excellency hath been found by experience to stir the sad and drowie to strange an alacrity, that they have wearied the spectators with continual dancing. In the mean time the pain hath abated, the infection being driven from the heart, and the mind released of her suffrance. If the Mullick intermit, the malady renews; but again continued, and it vanissheth. And objects of wonder have wrought the same effects in the frantick. A Bishop of this Country passing in the high-way, and clothed in red, one bit by a Tarantula, hooting thereat, fell a dancing about him. The offended Bishop commanded that he should be kept back, and made haste away. But the people did instantly intreat him to have compassion on the poor distressed Wretch, who would forthwith die unless he stood still, and were suffered to continue in that exercise. So shame or importunity enforced him to stay, until by dancing certain hours together the afflicted person became perfectly cured. The fourth of July we rowed against the wind, and could reach no further than Castilion: where the high-wrought Seas detained us the day following. Our churchlike Host, because we sent for such things to the Town whereto he had none, made us also fetch our water from thence, it being a mile off, though he had in his house a plentiful Fountain. And I think there are not that protest Christ a more uncivil people than the vulgar Calabrians. Over Land there is hot travelling without assuring pilgrimage, and hardly to be avoided murder; although all that you have about you (and that they know it) be we not worth a Dollar. Wherefore the common passage is by Sea, in this manner as we passed now. Along the shore there are many of these Oltaricks; most of the Towns are a good way removed, and mounted on Hills, with no eatic access. Divers small Forts adjoyn to the Sea, and Watch-towers throughout. For the Turks not seldom make incursions by night, lurking in the day time about those uninhabited Islands. Under these Forts we nightly haled up our Boat, and slept in our cloaths on the sand. And our fare was little better than our lodging: Tunny, Onions, Cucumbers, and Melons being our ordinary Viands. Not but that we might have had better, but the Souldiers were thrifty, and I was loth to exceed them. For there being but only one house at a place, they sold every thing not according to the worth, but to the necessity of the buyer. But Mulberries we might gather, and eat of free cost; dangerously unwholesome, if not pulled from the Trees before Sun-rising. Of them there are here every where an infinite number; inasmuch, that more milk is made in Calabria, than besides in all Italy. And from the leaves of those that grow higher on the Mountains (for the Apeimine stretcheth along the midst of this Country) they gather plenty of Manna, the best of all other, which falls thereon like a dew in the night time. Here a certain Calabrian, hearing that I was an English-man, came to me, and would needs persuade me that I had insight in Magicke; for that Earl Eschel was my Country-man, who lives at Naples, and is in those parts famous for suspected Necromancy. He told me that he had treasure hidden in his house; the quantity and quality shewn him by a Boy, upon the Conjuraton of a Knight of Malta, and offered to share it between us, if I could help him unto it. But I answered, that in England we were at defiance with the Devil; and that he would do nothing for us.

On the sixth of July we landed by noon before Paula, and ascended the Town high mounted on a Mountain. Here was St. Francis born, from whom the Order of the Minims is derived. A mile above there is a Monastery consecrated unto him : where one of his teeth, which cureth the toothach (if you will believe them) is to be seen, with a Rib of his, his Beard, his Habit, and Sandals. They say, at Meta, that being denied passage by a Fisher-man, he swam over the Phare in his Gown, (having first petitioned Heaven) and for that was canonized. The next day we touched at Belvidere ; then at Liscare , whereof Carolus Spinola is Prince , whose elder Brother was taken by the Turks. The consonancy of the names , or treachery of the people, have authorized the report that Isariot was here born. In the cool of the Evening we rowed to Paleneta. July the 8. we crossed the Bay of Salern , of that ancient City so named ; seated in the bottom thereof ; honoured with a Prince and a famous University ; but how blessed in the temper !

Quæ Boreæ gelidas furias contemnit Orantis,
Torva procellosi depelcit arma Noti.
Medorum & sylvis secundas provocat auras ;
Fundit & à bifenis Indicia dona fugis.
Protinus Autumnum Veris cum tempore ceras,
Et Ver cum Autumni tempore ceras idem.
Hunc accessit Hyems, vernantibus uda capillis ;
Et peperit nitens, & sibi poma legit.
Tota mari fruitur ; terræ dominatur amara ;
Et cœli mutat iura ; quid ergo ? Dea.

J. C. Scal.

That night we arrived at a little Village some twelve miles beyond, where we lodged, as the night before, in a little Chappel. The next morning betimes we reached the Cape ; from

Alta procellosa speculatrix vertice Pallas.
Sene. Epist. 77.

Whose stormy crown far off high Pallas sees.

her Temple there being said to have been erected by Ulysses ; and formerly called the Promontory of Minerva. Here also stood a renowned Athenæum, flourishing in the several excellencies of Learning and Eloquence. Inasmuch, as from hence grew the Fable of the Syrens, (feigned to have inhabited here about) who so enchanted with the sweetness of their Songs and deepness of their Science : of both, thus boasting to Ulysses :

Huc age profectus, gloriose Ulysses, ingens gloria Græcorum,
Navem siste, ut nostram vocem audias.
Non enim unquam aliquis huc præternavigavit nave nigra,
Priusquam nostram suavem ab ore vocem audiret,
Sed hic delectatus abire, & plura doctus.
Scimus enim tibi omnia quæcumque in Troja lata Græci, Trojique, deorum voluente passi :
Scimus etiam quæcumque fiunt in terra multipalca.
Hom. Od. 1. 12.

Hither thy Ship, (of Greeks) to glory steer ;
That our songs may delight thee, anchor here.
Never yet man in sable Bark sail'd by,
That gave not ear to our Sweet melody ;
And parted pleas'd, his knowledge bettered far :
We know what Greeks and Trojans in Troys War
Sustained by the doom of Gods : and all
That dust upon the food-full Earth befall.

the same attributes being given unto them which were given to the Muses. But after that these Students had abused their gifts to the colouring of wrongs, the corruption of manners, and subversion of good government ; the Syrens were feigned to have been transformed into Monsters, and with their melody and blandishments, to have enticed the Passenger to his ruin ; and such as came hither ; consuming their Patrimonyes, and poisoning their virtues with riot and effeminacy. This Promontory is beautifully enriched with Wines and Fruits : of whose pregnancy the City, that now stands on the extent thereof, may seem to be named.

Majores Massam dixerunt nomine, namque
Affuit omni genera commoditate solum.
Cunctiorum hic etiam collecta est massa bonorum,
Ut merito hoc Massæ nomen habere putet,
Paul. Fartari.

By th' Ancients Mass'a call'd, for that the ground
Dost here with all commodities abound.
Besides a Mass of all good thou dost hold,
So that of merit Mass'a nam'd of old.

We passed between this Cape and Capra, an Island distant three miles from the same, small and rocky, having no Haven nor convenient station. But the air is there mild, even during the Winter ; being defended from the bitter North by the Sorrentine Moun-

Mountains, and by the West-wind, to which it lies open, refreshed in the Summer : possessing on all sides the pleasure of the Sea, and the delicate Prospects of Vesuvium, Naples, Capra, and the adjoining Islands. The Theleboans did first inhabit it, so called of Thebon, the Father of Oebalus.

Nor shall our Verse thee Oebalus forget,
Whom the Nymph Subethis to Thebon bore :
Thebon then old the Crown of Capra wore,
And Theleboans rul'd—

Nec tu carminibus nostris inditus abibus,
Oebale, quon generalem Thebon Subethide Nymph
Feror Theleboam Capreas cum regna teneret, Jam senior—
Virg. Æn. 1. 7.

who were originally of Samus. But when Augustus Cæsar came into these parts, it was inhabited by Grecians. And because an old leafless Tree did flourish afresh upon his landing in the Island, he would needs have it of the Neapolitans, in exchange for Enaria ; which from thenceforth he variously beautified, and honoured with his retirements. But Tyberius made Capra, by his cruelty and lusts, both infamous and unhappy ; who hither withdrawing from the affairs of the Common-wealth, (for that the Island was unaccessible on all sides by reason of the upright cliffs, except only at one place, no man being suffered to land but upon especial admittance) hence sent his Mandates of death. In the mean time making it a very stews of incredible beastliness, which modestly will not suffer to relate. Inasmuch, that Capra was titled the Island of secret lusts, and he Capreneus. His usual Companions were Magicians and Sooth-sayers ; whereof the Satyr, speaking of Sejanus,

The Princes Tutor glorying to be nam'd,
Sitting in caves of Capra with desert d Chaldeans—

—Tutor haberi
Principis angusta Capreorum in rupe iudicium
Cum grege Chaldaeo—
Juv. Sat. 10.

The principal of these was Thrasyllus ; whom Tyberius intending on a time to thrust down from a cliff as they walked together, in that he had failed in a former prediction, and perceiving by his looks that he was troubled in his mind, demanded the cause. Who replied that by his Art he foresaw some hardly to be avoided danger to be near him : whereat Tyberius amazed, altered his purpose. A few years before his death, the Pharus there standing, and spoken of by Pamphilius, (Pharus on Theleboan rocks sweet light Sad Sailers (Moon-light) shows in erring night.)

Theleboanque domus trepidis ubi dulcia nautis
Lumina noctivagæ tollit Pharus amula Luas.
Stat. l. 3. Silv.

was thrown down by an Earth-quake. Unto this Island they used to confine offenders, a custom that continues to this day. Amongst other Grots here is one that hath an entrance very obscure, but leads into a lightforn Cave, exceeding pleasant, by reason of the water dropping down from on high. About the shore there are divers ruines, sufficient witnesses of the Roman Magnificency. Here is a little City (whereof there is a Bishop) of the name of the Island, having a strong Fortrefs ; so seated, that by one alone it may be defended. And Anacapra, a Town erected on a higher Rock, mounted by a narrow, steep, and difficult passage : yet the Inhabitants by use, and with burdens on their backs, ascended it with ease. Besides these, towards the North are sundry fragling habitations. The Inhabitants are generally Fisher-men and Ship-wrights, being much employed about the Navy at Naples. In regard whereof they made a Petition, that such as were banished and confined unto this Island, might not stay in Anacapra by night, lest they should force or corrupt their Wives in their absence. They are exempted from all payments, permitted to wear Arms, yet live in great poverty, and are often at Sea surpris'd by Turks, who lead them into servitude.

On the right hand we left Sorrentum, so called of the Syrens ; which doth require a more large description than our brevity will permit : destroyed by Pisal Bassa in the year 1558. when drawing near unto Naples, we threw all the bread we had into the Sea, twenty Ducats being forfeited for every Loaf brought thither ; for that they will have the better utterance for their own. About noon, having run all that morning before the wind, we arrived at Naples.

Of the time when the City was built, divers Authors do differ, not to be reconciled by reason of the antiquity. Some say, an hundred twenty years after the destruction of Troy, others but twenty, and others say otherwise. No less disagree they concerning the Builder ; whereof the Neapolitan Poet,

D. eris extracta à dulci Syrene; Phaleri
Diceris, & foelix imperantis honor.
Dieris, & Veneris gratissimus hortus, & acris
Alcidis campus diceris esse novus.
Dieris, & flavæ Cereis pulchissima tellus;
D' ceris intonsi vinea pulchra Dei.
Non mirum; ipsa urbes superas dulcedine cunctas,
Imperio, forma, robore, fruge, mero.
Angustian

But that it was first built by the Inhabitants of Cuma is the most approved; and called Parthenope (a name most frequently given it by the Poets) of the Syren Parthenope; who was here intombed under a little Hill not far from the Haven, called the Mountain, divinely honoured by the Neapolitans; and whence Oracles were said to be given; demolished after by an Earth-quake.

*Exere semitibus fubidè de pulvere vultus,
Parthenope, cinemque afflato Monte sepulchri
Pone super tumulos, & magni funus alumni.
Statius l. 5. Silv.*

*Parthenope, from earth thy look half bare Forthwith advance, th' inclosing mountains torn;
And on thy sons sad barge spread thy forc'd bair.*

Now when the City began exceedingly to flourish, to the neglect and threatened defolation of Cuma, the Cumans razed it to the earth; for which being punished with a plague, they were admonished by an Oracle to rebuild it, and to offer sacrifice yearly at the Tomb of the Syren. Of that new edification it was called Neapolis: but Strabo faith, of the new Inhabitants, who were Athenians, and others of the Greek Nation. This City is not only the Metropolis of Campania, but Queen of the Picentines, Hirpines, Lucanians, Bruicians, Calabrians, Salernitans, Samnites, Vestintians, Ferentians, and Damianians. Her Throne is answerable to her Dignity; placed under a smiling Heaven, in a rich and flourishing soil. Bounded on the South-East side with a Bay of the Tyrrhene Sea, unacquainted with tempests, along which the stretcheth; and is back'd by Mountains ennobled for their generous Wines: whereof ascending a part, the enjoyeth the delicate prospects of Vesuvium, Surmontum, Capræ, Misenum, Portici, and Euraria. Her beauty is inferior unto neither. The private Buildings being graceful, and the publick stately; adorned with Statues, the work of excellent Workmen; and sundry preserved Antiquities.

*Hic Graiis penitus defecta metallis
Saxa, quod Eoz respicit vena Syrenæ,
Synade quod mœstis Phrygiæ fodere securis
Per Cyclois lugentis agron, ubi marmore picto
Candida purpureo distinguitur arca gyro.
Hic Amyclei cœlum de monte Lycurgi
Quod viret, & molles imitatur rupibus herbas,
Hic Nomadum lucent flaventia saxa; Thaisroque,
Et Chios, & gaudens fluctus spectare Caristos.
Statius Silv. l. 2.*

As for her strength, the hand of Art hath joyned with Nature to make her invincible. For, besides the being almost environed with the Sea, and Mountains not to be transversed without much difficulty and disadvantage; she is strongly walled, and further strengthened with three strong Castles. The one, and that impregnable, standeth aloft, and behind it, on the top of Mount Hermus, or of Erasmus, (so called of a little Chappel there dedicated unto him) begun by Charles the Second in the year 1289. and finished by Robert his Successor: where the Tower of Bel-fort stood, erected 119 years before by the Normans. This is a defence to the adjoining Country; a safeguard and curb to the City; for it over-looketh it all, and hath both of Sea and Land a large survey and no narrow command. Charles the Fifth pulling down the old, did strongly rebuild it, according to the modern fortification; cutting a way about it out of the Rock for the conveyance of Horse-men. The Gate thereof doth present this Inscription.

IMPERATORIS CAROLI V. AUG. CÆSARIS JUSSU, AC PETRI TOLEDÆ
VILLE FRANCHÆ MARCHIONIS JUSTISS. PRO REGIS AUPICIIS, PYR-
RHUS ALOISIUS SERINA VALENTINUS, D. JOHANNIS EQUES, CESA-REUSQUE MILITUM PRO SUO BELLICIS IN REB. EXPERIMENTO.
F. CURAVIT. M. D. XXXVIII.

In

In the year 1587. and in the Winter season, it was set on fire by Lightning; which taking hold of the powder, blew up all that was about it, and shook the whole City: whereof much no question had suffered, had it not been kept so near the top of the Castle. The house of Don Gaspar de Toledo, the Governour thereof, was shaken to the ground; whom I mention the rather, for that he was commonly called the fortunate Knight. On a time in a tempest a wave threw him over-board, and another cast him into another Galley, and so saved him. Then also the day before this accident happened, he was removed with his family, but Philip the Second both repaired and enlarged it. The Souldiers have goodly Orchards about it, to the increase of their entertainment. A pleasant place, and pleasantly they live there; arriving at the extremity of old age through the excellency of the Air. Within the City, near the Sea, and aloft, there standeth another, called, The new Castle, built by Charles Duke of Anjou, King of Naples, by the Popes donation and by conquest, to defend the City and underlying Haven from Maritime invasions. This Castle, Alphonfus the First having expelled the French-men, greatly enlarged; so that at this day it may stand in comparison with the principal Fortresses of Italy; furnished by Charles the Fifth and Philip the Second, with all Military provision, wherein there lieth a strong Garrison. In the midst of this Castle stands a Royal Palace, adorned bravely both without and within; the Seat of the Viceroys. The third Castle stands at the South-East corner of the City, upon a Rock that thrusteth like an arm into the Sea; and is joyned by the labour of man to the Continent. It was call'd Megaris, either of Megara, the Wife of Hercules, or of the Megarians which there inhabited; and Myagras, of the hopeles fortunes of the imprisoned, there being from thence no hope of escape. Called also the Castle of Lucullus, either for that he made it first an Island, or for the Fifth-stoves by him hewn out of the Rock, and built; which yet are manifest by their ruins. Whereof a late Traveller;

*We Megaris, with Oysters stor'd, past by,
Nam'd of an Egg; of old Lucullus joy,
And mansion free from the Tearian fury,
A cave yet extant, with a living spring,
The bearded Barbels sily harbouring.*

*Ofriteram Megarim fornicum nomen ab ovo
Legimus, ut peribent Luculli diuini olim
Gaudia, & Icario Villam solamen ab æstu.
Exstat adhuc rupes Icarus cava, foetque perenni
Dulcis aqua, statio barbaris comoda mulis.*

It is now called Castelo del Ovo, in regard of the form of the Rock, built by William the Third, and named for a long time the Castle of the Normans. Enlarged by Charles the First; repaired by the two Kings Robert and Alphonfus; and augmented, and strongly fortified by Philip the Second; testified by this their engraven Inscription:

PHILIPPUS II. HISPANIARUM REX
PONTEM A CONTINENTI AD LUCULLIANAS ARCES
OLIM AUSTRI FLUCTIBUS CONQUASSATUM,
NUNC SAXIS OBICIBUS RESTAURAVIT
FIRMUMQUE REDDIDIT.
D. JOANNE ZUNICA PROREGA. A. D. M. D. XCV.

To let pass the Arsenal belonging to the Navy, not unfurnished of necessities, speak we now of the Mole; that from the South-winds defendeth the Haven; (yet is the whole Bay an excellent Road) a work of great charge and no small admiration. This stretcheth into the Sea five hundred paces; first, towards the South-East, and then to the North-East; lined on the sides, and paved under foot with great square stone. In the midst whereof stands a Marble Fountain. It was begun by Charles the second, enlarged by Alphonfus the First, but absolutely finished by the Emperour Charles the Fifth, and Philip his Successor. The concourse of sundry Nations to this Haven doth add an over-abundance to their native plenty; Aputia sends them Almonds, Oyl, Honey, Cattel, and Cheese; Calabria (besides most of the fore-named) Silk, Manna, Figs, Sugar, excellent Wines, Minerals, and matter for the building of Ships; Sicilia relieveth them with Corn, if at any time their own soil prove unfruitful; enriching them further-more with her fore-mentioned productions; Africa furnisheth them with Skins, Spain with Cloth and Gold; Elba with Steel and Iron, and we with our Countries Commodities, so that nothing is wanting. A City dedicated from the first foundation to delight and retirement: whereunto the Greeks (the Founders) were wholly addicted. Hither repaired the Romans, when either oppressed with the affairs of the World, or with misfortunes, age, or infirmities; to recreate their spirits, and possess a longed-for tranquillity. Whereunto Pamphilius inviting his Wife.

I strive

Has ego te sedes (nam nec mihi barbara Thrace, Nec Libye natalis solum) transferre laboro,
Quas & mollis hyems, & frigida temperat æstas,
Quas imbelles fretem torpenti bus aluit undis.
Pax fecura locis & defidis oia vitæ;
Et nunquam turbata quies, sœnque peracti,
Nulla foro rabies, aut stridit jurgia legis,
Norum jura viis—

Silvar. l. 3.

And Virgil,

Illo Virgilium me tempore dulcis alebat,
Parthenope, studiis forentem ignobilis ætæ.
Georg. l. 4.

But now the only Regal City of Italy; her Royal Court is completely furnished with Princes and Commanders; her Tribunals are pestered with clamorous Advocates and litigious Clients; her streets with Citizens and Foreigners, in pursuit of their delights and profits; whose ears are daily injured to the found of the Drum and Fife, as their eyes to the bounding of Steeds and glittering of Armour. So that the seemeth at this day to afford you all things but her formerly vacancy. But first the receptacle of Philosophy, then of the Muses, and lastly, of the Souldiery.

Parthenope varii statuit discrimina mundi,
Quæ tria diverso tempore facta dedit.
Aurea Pythagoras communis commoda vitæ,
Et docuit Sophiæ Græciæ magna procos.
Altera succedens studiorum mollior ætas,
Admissit Muses debiliore sono.
Tercia vulsiffe quævisit præmia ferri,
Atque equitum potuit sola tenere decus.
Sic ex privata & serva regina superbum:
Roma, quod es fueras, quæ modo sum quod eras.

J. C. Scal.

This City was first a Common-wealth of the Athenians; after a partaker of the Roman Privileges; then successively subject to the Oriental Empire. Count Roger the Norman did make it a Regal City, by joyning thereunto Apulia and Sicilia on this side the Phare (for so was Calabria then called) the first King of Naples: crowned in the year 1125. by Anacletus the Antipope; as also of Sicilia, the Island whereof we have spoken before. These two Kingdoms suffering as it were one fortune, until the expulsion of the French-men out of the last named. But the Kingdom of Naples continued in a direct line in the House of Anjou, until Joan the First, the Niece unto King Robert, was deposed by Urban the Sixth, because she had defended the cause of Clement the Seventh: which Urban gave it unto Charles the Prince of Durace, descended of the Brother of the foresaid Robert. Possessed after by his two Children, Ladislaus, who was also King of Hungaria, (as was his Father) and another Joan; but not without Wars and Rebellions. For Joan the First adopted Lodowick the Duke of Anjou (the second Son to the King of France) her Heir, by the assent of Clement the Seventh. And although he was slain in battle by Charles of Durace, yet Lodowick, his Son was crowned by the said Clement, in vain contending for the possession with Ladislaus, and Queen Joan the Second. But his Son Lodowick was called in by Martin the Fifth, and invested with the Royalty. Who deprived Queen Joan, for that she refused to aid him against Dracchini a Rebel to the Papacy. Whereupon the Queen adopted Alphonfus King of Aragon her Heir, provided that he should assist her against Lodowick her Enemy. But when he came unto Naples, finding all the Affairs of State to be governed by her, he attempted to commit her to Prison: which she avoided by flight, and in revenge thereof revoked the former adoption; adopting her former Enemy Lodowick in his stead. Lodowick dead, the Queen adopted Remains his Brother, and died not long after. When Ferdinand the base Son of Alphonfus, pretending that the Kingdom was lapsed to the Church, entered Naples by force, and was confirmed in the Government thereof by Emgenius. So lost it was by the French, and possessed by the Aragonians, until after the flight of King Ferdinand, the French and Spaniards divided it between them, under the conduct of Lemmo the Urban and this Clement were Popes at one time: but the latter was left out of the Catalogue of Popes, being held for a Schismatic. He kept his Court in Avignon.

*I strive, dear Sweet, (for Lybia nor wild Thrace Gave birth to me) to draw thee to this place.
This, where warm Winters, and cool Summers rain:
Wish with calm waves of the still quiet Main.
Here vacant Life, here Peace, here Empire keeps
Never disturbed rest, unbroken sleep.
No noise of Courts, nor wrangling Strifes of Laws,
Old usage is their rule—*

*Me Virgil sweet Parthenope then nourish'd,
Who in the studies of retir'd life flourish'd.*

*Distinguishing times changes, three of worth,
At several times Parthenope brought forth.
Pythagoras to such as wisdom sought.
The fruits of civil life in Great Greece taught.
The next, lest weighty, yet with happy wit,
The sister founding Muses did admit.
The third devoted unto Wars pursuit,
Of honour'd Knighthood held the sole reprieve.
Obscure, a servant; now I rule a Queen:
Rome, was what thou art; and what thou hast been.*

the Twelfth, and Ferdinand sumamed the Catholic. But the French were soon after driven out by the Spaniards, who possessed the whole, and therein do continue to this day, not without the grudge of the other, and secret repining of the Papacy, affirming that it belongeth to the Church, together with Sicilia. But they have not the will to contend with so fast a friend, neither have they the power. Besides, who knows not that the one of them could not so well subsist without the other. The German, in acknowledgment of their tenure of the Papacy, gave the Pope yearly eight and forty thousand Ducats, together with a white Horse. The money, though remitted by Julius the Second unto Ferdinand the Catholic, yet at this day is paid together with the white Hackney. The Spaniards govern this Kingdom by a Viceroy; yet to be directed when occasion shall serve, by the Council appointed for Italy. The Viceroy being now Duke of Lemo.

The many innovations that have hapned to this unhappy Kingdom have proceeded partly from the over-much power and factions of the Nobility; but chiefly in that the Election of their Kings depended on the Popes, who deposed and crowned according to their spleens and affections: whereunto the shortness of their lives and often contention of the Papacy (the assisted approving, and the resisted depriving) may be added. But the Spaniards hath secured his Estate by the prevention of these disturbances, taking all power and greatness, more than titular, from the Nobility; suppressing the popular, and indeed the whole Country, by the foreign Souldiery garrisoned amongst them, who may obey perhaps with as much love, as Galley-slaves obey those that have deprived them of their fortunes and liberty. The King doth keep in this Kingdom a Regiment of four thousand Spaniards, besides sixteen hundred in the maritime Towns and Fortresses. A thousand great Horse are inrolled, and four hundred and fifty light Horse-men. The Battalion consists of two hundred thousand, five hundred threescore and thirteen: these are not in pay but in time of service, and then raised in part, according to occasion. For every hundred fires are charged with five Foot-men; and there are four millions, eleven thousand four hundred fifty and four fires in this Kingdom. These are named by certain in every Town deputied for the same: but so, that if they be not well liked by their Captains, they make choice of others in their stead. The Captains and Officers in time of Peace have their standing Pensions. Their strength at Sea consisteth of seven and thirty Gallies. But what doth the King receive from this Kingdom more than trouble and title? For although the Revenue and Donatives (now made a Revenue) with impositions, amount yearly to two millions, and nity thousand Ducats; yet defalc one million, and thirty thousand thereof given ordinarily away in pensions and other largesses: the rest sufficeth not by much to maintain the Garrisons, Gallies, Horse-men, and remainder of the Souldiery.

This Country, for the better Government, is divided into thirteen Provinces, wherein are a thousand five hundred threescore and three Cities and Towns, (twenty of them the Seats of Archbishops, and an hundred and seven of Bishops) those along the Coasts of principal strength: and although it be a Peninsula, yet are there few Havens throughout, and not many safe stations. The Towns and Cities are subject unto Nobles of lundry Titles, (such as are not, have their Captains) who as they increase in number, decrease in authority: for that many of them have been bought by men of base conditions; and many of the ancient have exhausted their Patrimonies. Besides, no Office is allotted them, nor Command, whereby they might attain to estimation: every Officer is countenanced against them; all their faults look into; Justice executed upon them with rigour; their Vassals (in whose love and obedience their Potency did formerly consist) now alienated from them, and being backt in their contentions are grown neglected of them. To conclude, they have lost their stings; and desperate of their liberty nourish in their breasts an hatred which they dare not express, much less put into action, having no likelihood of foreign assistance; all the Princes of Italy being either in perit & amity with the Spaniards, or awed by his greatness. As for the French, their memory is deservedly hateful unto them. The body of the Nobility consists of fourteen Princes, five and twenty Dukes, thirty Marquesses, fifty four Earls, and four thousand Barons. For default of Heirs Male, their Principalities revert to the King, who sells them most commonly to men of mean birth and meaner spirits, who are hated of the honourable: whereby a desired envy and discord is tollered amongst them. Most of these do live most part of the year in the City, where they have five Seats for their five Assemblies of Capua, Nido, Musana, Spente, and Lassente.

The

The chief Officers in the Kingdom under the Viceroy, are the high Constable, Chief Justice, Admiral, Great Chamberlain, Secretary, Marechal, and Chancellor. The more severe that these are to the Naturals, the greater their repute with the Spaniards, who enrich themselves by extorting from the other, and give a pregnant proof of the many calamities which are incident unto all Kingdoms that are governed by Deputies. Nor is the King a little abused by their avarice, and that not only in the Souldiery, of whom there be fewer by an unreasonable number than are inrolled and paid for. The Taxes that are imposed upon Silks, as well wrought as unwrought, hath so inbalanced the price, that the foreign Merchant neglecteth to trade; to the great impoverishment of the Citizens, whose especial Commodity doth consist in working, and quick sale thereof. And what Rates are imposed upon Victuals and Wines, may be gathered by this, that Custom of Herbs spent yearly in Naples amounteth to 4000*l*. of our money. And of Wines they have such a quantity, that 12000 Butts are every season transported out of this Kingdom.

Naples is the pleasantest of Cities, if not the most beautiful; the building all of free-stone, the streets are broad and paved with Brick, vaulted underneath for the conveyance of the fullage, and served with water by Fountains and Conduits. Her Palaces are fair; but her Temples stately, and gorgeously furnished; whereof, adding Chappels and Monasteries within her Walls and without, (for the Suburbs do equal the City in magnitude) she containeth three thousand. It is supposed that there are in her three hundred thousand men, besides women and children. Their habit is generally Spanish: the Gentry delight much in great Horses, whereupon they prance continually throw the streets. The number of Carosses is incredible that are kept in this City, as of the Segges not unlike to Horse-litters, but carried by men. These wait for Fares in the corners of streets, as Water-men do at our Wharves; where those that will not foot it in the heat, are born (if they please unseen) about the City. None do wear Weapons, without especial admittance, but the Souldiery. Their Women are beholding to Nature for much beauty, or to cunning Art, for a not to be discerned imposture: howsoever they excel in favour, which Art can have no hand in. They are elegantly clothed; and silk is a work-day wear for the Wife of the meanest Artificer. They are not altogether so strictly guarded as in other places of Italy; perhaps less tempted, in regard of the number of allowed Curtizans, there being of them in the City about thirty thousand.

Before we go to Puzozole, let us travel a little without the North-side of the City, and turn with the Land as far as Vesuvium. Not to speak of the admirable Orchards (though here every where so common as not to be admired) nor of the pleasant and profitable soil; we will first observe the ample Fountain of Labulla, there rising first, but supposed to proceed, by concealed passages, from the root of Vesuvium. It is called Labulla, in that the waters do boil as it were; and Labiola, in that they throw themselves into the mouth of an Aqueduct; wherein under earth conveyed for the space of two miles, they divide afunder.

*Parce alia quæ perspicuo delabitur alveo
Irrigui Sebethus aquis, & gurgine leni
Prata fecat, liquidique terit sola roseida lymphis.*
Gab. Alii.

*Th' one way Sebethus through seen chanel glides,
And with mild streams the dewy soil divides.*

Turning to the South thorow certain Marishes, and running under Saint Magdalens Bridge into the Sea; thereupon called Fiume de la Magdalena. The other part continueth her progress towards the City, called particularly Formello; but generally Labulla, as before the division. Whereof the *Neapolitan*s;

*Sed quæ me rapis heu raucum purissima Nympha,
Nympha Labulla, urbem fonte perenne rigans,
Illabens subter vicatim moenia circum,
Perque domos largo flumine, perque vias,
Atria aquis, domus omnis aquis, urbs omnis abundat
Nilis, & centum fontibus unda venit,
Præbet ubique libens, fruenti pocula lymphæ
Splendidi vitæ, dulcor ambrosiæ.*
Donat. Franc.

*Ab whither Nymp force you faint me! Labulla,
Warring the Town from Springs that ne're decay,
Through houses, by high-ways, with streams profound
Under streets gliding, walls embracing round:
Courts, dwellings, all the City serving so
With waters, that through hundred chanel's flow;
With grateful cups to thirsty lips each where Present, Ambrosia less sweet, glass less clear.*

So that the whole City doth stand as it were upon Rivulets, whereby it is not only served, but purged. The former Poet thus sings of the loves of the divided streams

Carr-

*Care-free Sebethus (had not false love stung
His gentle breast) shew to the river sung:
Come to the Willows, to the Vines cool shade,
Come, neat Labulla, to our songs; loo'd Maid
Labulla, come. Here Garlands, sweet confitures
Of Violets have I for thee in mounds of Offers.*

*Conturbat vacuus curis Sebethus ad amorem,
Si vacuus iners perfidiosus amor:
Ipse veni ad falices, & opacæ umbracula vitæ,
Ipse veni ad nostros culta Labulla modos.
Cula Labulla veni, sunt hic tibi ferra parata,
Nexa simul calathis, juncta simul violis.*

The far end of this Valley is confined by Vesuvium, four miles removed, and East of the City; from whence the Sun is first seen to arise, as if that were his Bed-chamber. This Mountain had a double top; that towards the North doth end in a Plain: The other towards the South aspireth more high, which when hid in Clouds prognosticates Rain to the *Neapolitan*s. In the top there is a large deep hollow, without danger to be defended into, in form of an Amphitheatre; in the midst a Pit which leads into the entrails of the earth, from whence the Mountain in times past did breathe forth terrible flames, the mouth whereof is almost choked with broken Rocks and Trees that are fallen thereon. Next to this the matter thrown up is ruddy, light, and soft; more removed, black, and ponderous; the uttermost brow that declineth like the seats in a Theatre, flourishing with Trees and excellent Pasturage. The middle of the Hill is shaded with Chestnut-trees and others, bearing sundry fruits. The lower parts admirably clothed with Vines, that afford the best Greek Wines in the World: which hath given to the Mountain the name of de Somno, in regard of their excellency: affording to the owners the yearly revenue 300000 Ducats. They clarify it with the white of Eggs, to suppress the fuming, adding Sulphur thereunto, or Salt, or Allum. So now it hath lost the name of Vesuvium, with the cause why it was given, which signifieth a Spark, as Vesuvius a Conflagration. It flamed with the greatest horror in the first, or as some say, in the third year of the Emperour Titus; where, besides Beasts, Fishes, and Fowl, it destroyed two adjoining Cities, Herculaniun and Pompæia, with the people sitting in the Theatre. Pliny the natural Historian, then Admiral to the Roman Navy, was suffocated with the smook thereof.

*Then the remote Africk, suffered the dire beat
Of twofold rage, with showers of dust replet:
Scorch'd Egypt, Memphis, Nilus felt, amaz'd,
The worst tempest in Campanian vail'd
Not Asia, Syria, nor the Towers that stand
In Neptune's surges, Cyprus, Crete (Joves land)
The scattered Cyclads, nor the Muses seat
Minerva's town, that vail plague scap'd. Such beat,
Such vapors break forth from full jaws: then show
When Earth-born, horrible Omejan
Hot, vomits ire, beneath Vesuvium's Throne.*

*Sensit procer Africa tellus
Tunc ex pulveris gemina incendia nimbis,
Sensit & Aegyptus, Memphisque, & Nilus atroci
Tempestatem illam Campano & litore mistam
Nec caruisset, Asiam, Syriamque tremenda
Pelle, nec extantes Neptuni & fluctibus arces,
Cyprumque Cretamque & Cycladum ordine nullo
Per pontum parvas; nec doctum Palladis urbem:
Tantus inextinguis erupit faucibus ardor,
Ac vapor; Omejon vomeret cum servidus iram
Terrigena horribilis Vesuviana mole sepulcris.*

Hier. Borgius.

Dion assures in a manner as much. But Bodin, the Confuter of all Historians, doth decide it. Notwithstanding Cassiodorus writes as great matters of a later conflagration, whereupon Theodoricus (nail King of the Goths in Italy) did remit his Tribute to the damned Campanians. Mareclianus writes, that the ashes thereof, transported in the Air, obscured all Europe: and that the *Constantinopolitan*s: being wonderfully alighted therewith, (inasmuch that the Emperour Leo took the City) in Memorial of the same did yearly celebrate the 12. of November. It also burnt in the 16. year of Constantine the Fourth, and at such time as Bellisarius took Naples, and ground, but ejected no cinders: and again when the Saracens invaded Africa. Platina writes that it flamed in the year 685. prognosticating the death of Benedict the Second, with ensuing Slaughters, Rapines, and Deaths of Princes. During the Papacy of two other Benedicts, the eighth and the ninth, it is said to have done the like. The latter, the last, which was in the year 1024. yst often since it hath been wonderfully feared. And although it hath made sundry dreadful devastations, yet the fruitful ashes thrown about doth seem to repair the fore-going losses, with a quick and marvellous fertility. At the foot of the Hill there are divers vents, out of which exceeding cold winds do continually issue, such as by Ventiducts from the vast Caves above Padua, they let into their rooms at their pleasure, to qualify the heat of the Summer. Sparsacum the Fencer, and King-leader of the fugitive Bond-slaves, no less a terrour unto Rome than Hannibal, did make this Mountain the seat of his War. Where besieged by Clodius, he

he

he by a strange Stratagem, with bonds made of Vines, descended into the bottom of the hollow Hill, (being long before it first begun to flame) and finding out a private passage, issued suddenly upon the unsuspected Romans; seized on their Tents, and pursuing his Victory, over-ran all Campania.

A while after we went to see the Antiquities of Putzole, with the places adjoyn-

A. The Grot of Pauflype.
B. Virgils Sepulchre.
C. The Lake of Agnano.
D. The Court of Vulcan.
E. The Amphitheatre.
F. The Pere of Putzole.
G. Cicero's Academy.
H. Mount Gaurus.

I. The new Mountain.
K. The Lake of Lucrine.
L. Port Julius.
M. The Lake Avernus.
N. The Baths of Trivula.
O. Ruins of Diana's Temple.
P. A Castle built by Charles the Fifth.
Q. Mercato di Sabbato.

R. The dead Sea.
S. The Theatre.
T. Vatin Villa.
V. The Lake of Acherusia.
X. Arco felices.
Y. Licola.
Z. Mergellim.

ing; where the wonderful Secrets of Nature are epitomized, and Art had congested together her incredible performances: whose ruins do yet affirm that Prodigality and Luxury are no new crimes, and that we do but re-do old vices. Hard without the City the way is crossed with Pauflype: the name doth signifie a releaser from cares; for that the Wine (wherewith all this Mountain is richly furnished) is an approved remedy for these confuming infirmities. Here Horace, in the person of Tenace exiled:

— O fortes pejoraeque passi
Mecum sepe viri, nunc vino pellite curas:
Cras ingens intrabimus æquor.
Hor. l. i. Od. 7.

and again,

Siccis omnia nam dura Deum proposuit neque
Mordaces aliter diffugisse sollicitudines.
Quis post vina gravem militiam aut pauperiem crepet?
Hor. l. i. Od. 10.

For which cause Bacchus was called Liber. But what need we, in this drinking Age, that exhortation of Seneca; which is, sometimes to divide an hair with the Drunkard, by the example of Solon and Archeftlaus; and that the mind is now and then a little to be cherished, and set free from an over-sad sobriety? And for that cause was Wine given.

Stout Mates that oft with me have born a share
In banter baps, with wine now drown your care;
To-morrow will we to vast Seas repair.

All things are difficult to the dry: nor can
Care otherwise be chased from pensive man,
Who, wine-whet, of warts squalls, or want complains?

O Menelab, the gods for ever blest,
Made wine to expel grief from the troubled breast.

O Menelae dii vinum fecere beati,
Ut curas animi pellat mortalibus acries.
Hem.

But (quoth he) rarely to be used liberally; lest thereby an evil habit be attained. This Mountain doth stretch from North-east to South-west, in form of a prostrated Pyramid; and although flat on the top, on each side steeply declining: South-eastward bordering with the Sea, and North-westward with the Country. I will not now speak of the delicate Wine which it yieldeth, neat and fragrant, of a more pleasing gait, and far less heavy than those of Vesuvium; nor of those Orchards both great and many, replenished with all sorts of almost to be named Fruit-trees, especially with Oranges and Lemons, which at once do delight three senses; nor how grateful the soil is (though stony) to the Tiller. The Grot of Pauflype (a work of wonder) doth hasten our description: which passes under the Mountain for the space of six hundred paces (some say of a Mile) affording a delightful passage to such as pass between Naples and Putzole, of that part of Italy, receiving so much light from the ends and tunnel in the middle which letteth in the day from the high Mountain as is sufficient for direction. Throughout hewn out of the living Rock, paved under foot; and being so broad that three Carts with ease may pass each by other. On the left hand, and in the midst, there is a little Chappel, where a Lamp doth continually burn before the adored Image of our Lady, who is said to safeguard that place from all out-rages; which is the easier believed, because seldom any do there miscarry. This Vault, as the like is said to be begun by the Cimmerii, a people that inhabited hereabout in the time of the Trojan wars; though placed by Himer beyond the Scythian Bosphorus; where the air is thick and dark, deprived of the Sun (there faintly shining) by the lofty bordering Mountains, Hercupon came the Proverb of Cimmerian darkness; where Ovid placeth the Palace of Somnus.

A Cave there is near the Cimmerians, deep
In hollow hill, the mansion of dull sleep;
Never by Phœbus seen: from earth a night
Therof dim clouds ascend, and doubtful light.

Eit prope Cimmerios longo spelunca recessus,
Mons cavus, ignari domus & penetratae fomni.
Quo nunquam radis oriens, neque cadente
Phœbus adire potest; nebula caligine mista
Exhalatur humo, dubiaque crepuscula lucis.
Met. l. 11.

Those here were so called, in that they dwelt in Caves, living by theft, and not stirring abroad in the day time. They offered Sacrifice to the Mama, before they began to cut these darksome habitations, and from their most retired parts gave Oracles (or rather told them) to such as enquired. The god of dreams is therefore aptly feigned to reside amongst these dreamers, who are said to have been all put to the Sword by a certain King that was deluded by their Prophecies. The Grecians that inhabited this Country after them converted the Cimmerian Caves into Stoves, Baths, Passages, and such uses, amplified by the succeeding Romans, who exceeded all others in prodigious and expensive performances. Some do attribute the cutting through of this passage unto one Bassus, others (but falsely) to Lucullus, and others to Coccinus; but not that Coccinus that was Grand-father unto Nero. Whereof, I know not what Poet:

Who durst with Steel the mountains womb invade?
Who through the living rock a passage made?
Coccinus, trust declares, performed the same,
Lucullus now surrender thy stout fame.

Vicēra quis ferro est ausus percurrere montis?
Cautibus in duris quis patefecit iter?
Coccium verum est saxum montemque cavasse;
Vanæque jam celsæ fama, Luculle, tua.

Others there are that report that Virgil effected it by art magic (and Virgils Grot it is called by many); but whoever heard that Virgil was a Magician? Seneca tormented in this then horrid passage, doth call it a long dark dungeon: and further saith, that if it had light, the same would prove but unprofitable, by reason of the raised dust which thickened the air, and fell down again. And Petronius, that they used to pass through it with their bodies declining. Yet Strabo, that lived before either, hath written that it received light from the top, and was of that height and largeness, that two Carts might pass each by other. But the height, belike, was afterward choaked with Earth-quakes, and the passage with rubbish. And in process of time it afforded no passage, but enforced they were to clamber over the mountain; until Alphonfus the hill did cleanse, enlarge, and by cutting the jaws more high, did enlighten it. But Peter of Toledo, Viceroy of this Kingdom, bestowed thereon that perfection which now it retaineth.

Before you enter this Grot, upon the right hand aloft in the upright rock, in a Con- cave, there are certain small Pillars, if I forget not, sustaining an Urn which was told me to be the Sepulchre of Virgil; but erroneously: For that standeth above, right over the entrance, in form of a little Oratory, which the Ivy and Myrtle do clothe with their natural Tapetery; and, which is to be wondered at, (if it grow, as they say, of it self) a Laurel thrusteth out her branches at the top of the ruined Cupulo, to honour him dead that merited it living. In the midst of the Monument stood the Urn that contained his ashes, supported by nine Pillars, whereon was engraven this Distich:

Mantua me genuit, Calabri rapuere, tenet nunc
Parthenope; cecini pascua, tura, duces. Of fields, farms, fights I sung: life Mantua gave, Calabria death, Parthenope a grave.

Seen by Peter of Stephano, (who was alive within these forty years) as himself repor- ted. But one doth affirm (though contradicted by others) that the Neapolitans did give that Urn to the Mantuaus, upon their importunate suit. Others, that their Regu- lar Priests did convey it to their adjoining Convent; and from thence to have been born away by the Cardinal of Mantua, who dying in Genoa in his return there left it. But if either were true, no doubt but some memorials would have remained of so co- veted a possession; especially by the Mantuaus, who held themselves so honoured in his birth, that they stamp'd their Coin with his Figure. But rather it should seem that through time and negligence those Reliques are perished.

Quod scissus tumulus, quod fracta fit urna; quid What though the Tomb be torn, th' Urn broke? the place inde?
Sat celebris locus nomine vatis erit. The Poet's name abundantly will grace.
In antiq. monum.

He was born at Ande, a little Hamlet by Mantua: he lived 52 years, and died at Brundisium, the 22. of September, in the 100 Olympiad; having retired himself into Ca- labria to perfect his Æneids. He willed that his bones should be buried at Naples, where he had long lived: (which was performed by Augustus and Mæcenat, made his heirs by his Testament) even in those Groves where he had composed his Eclogs, and Georgicks. Purchased they were after by Silvius Italicus; who religiously celebra- ted his Birth-day, and frequented this Monument with a great devotion, as it had been Temple. Nor lets was it adorned by Statius Pompinus.

— & gentile sequutus
Litus ubi Ausonio se condidit hospita porta
Parthenope, tenuis ignaro pollice chordas
Pulso, Maroneique sedens in margine Templi Sumo animum & magni tumulus adcano magistri.
l. 4. Solm.

Following the fertile shore, where the fair guest
Parthenope in Ausonian Port doth rest;
My ruder hands to strike the strings presume;
Sitting by Maro's Temple, I assume
Courage, and sing to my great Masters Tomb.

It is fabled that the Ghost of Virgil hath been seen hereabout; whereof a Poet of these later times,

Anna eriam, ut fama est vatis placidissima sepe
Inter adoratum cernitur umbra necus?
Ioculices oculi, fortunatissima lyra,
Et quidquid sancto nascitur in memore:
M. Am. Plam.

True is it that this gentle Ghost hath been Amongst these fragrant Groves so often seen?
O happy eyes, woods fortunate!
What e're within your sacred confines grow!

Having passed through the aforesaid Grot to our no small astonishment, we fol- lowed the way of Puzzole through a level so clothed with Fruit-Trees, and under- growing Grain, as if it had been but one entire Orchard. After a while we turned on the right hand a little to the Lake of Agnano, three Miles well nigh in circuit; round, and included within high Mountains. The water thereof is sweet at the top, and salt underneath, by reason of some Mineral, so deep in the midit, that the Inhabitants say, that it hath no bottom. In the Spring of the year whole heaps of Serpents involved together do fall thercinto from the Crannies of the high Rocks, and are never more seen again. Whereupon it taketh that name, quasi aqua Angu- quium. Nothing liveth in it but Frogs; the occasion that it is so frequented by Fowl in the Summer. The Habitations hereabout are abandoned as unwhol- som

yet

yet is that inconveniency liberally recompenced by the infinite quantity of Line that is there watered, to the not to be believed benefit of the owners; the nature of the water being such, as in eight and forty hours it prepareth it. Within the compass of the Mountains, and near to the Lake is the natural Stove of St. German.

A. The entrance of the Grot of Pausippo toward Naples.
Well call'd a Stove that water wants; near heat
Of air insalubur'd makes the Patient sweat.
Before't a Lake, where Frogs and Snakes abound,
Which Beasts avoid, no Fish is therein found.
Who enters under this small roof, as snow
Warm'd by the Suns reflex, resolves so.
It clears the Spirits, clears the stomachs glut:
Warm's water, (into any vessel put)
Which weak Consumptions cures, the bowels heals;
And Ulcers dries that flattering skin conceals;
Here German Capuas Prelate, thee dost greet
Pascasius found, and helpt to abound more blest.

B. The Castle of Mormus.
C. Castello Novo.
D. Castello dell'Oss.
E. The Mountain Vesuvium.
Abique liquore domus bene sudatoria distat;
Nam solo patiens aere sudat homo,
Ante domum lacus est ranis plenusque colubris,
Nec fera nec pisces inveniantur ibi.
Ingreditur si quis parvæ testudinis umbram,
More nixis talæ corpora sola madent.
Evacuat Chymos, leve corpus reddit in ipso;
Quovis opposita est vasis tepescit aqua,
Hæc aqua languentes restaurat & illa sanat;
Ulcers desiccat: sub cute si qua latent.
Hic te Germanus Capuz caput ade reperitum,
Ad sacra, Pascas, pascua te reulit.

Aladinus.

The tale is (and St. Gregory, if those Dialogues be his, the teller) how St. German, when Bishop of Capua, advised by his Physicians to repair unto the Stove of the Serpents (for so was this place then call'd) for the cure of his infirmity, here found the soul of Pascasius tormented with heat; who had been an upright man, and full of pi- ety. Whereat affrighted, and demanding the cause; he answered, that it was for ta- king part with Laurentius against Symasus in their contention for the Papacy; desiring him for to pray unto God for him, and if that at his return he found him not there, he might be assured that his Prayers had prevailed. Which within a few days after he found to be so; and so the place took the name of St. German. This stands on the South-side of the Lake. But now speak we of that mortal Cave on the East, in the foot of the bordering Mountain, and entering the same not above three fathom. The mouth of it is large enough for two to enter at once; but the roof declineth by lit- tle and little unto the uttermost point thereof. Whatsoever hath life, being thrust into the far end, doth die in an instant. Yet entered it may be a good way with safe- ty: neither heat nor cold will oppress you, nor is there any damp or vapour to be discerned; being perspicuous to the bottom, and the sole thereof dusky. We made trial with a Dog; which we no sooner had thrust in, but without crying, or other- wise struggling than if shot to the heart, his tongue hung out, and his eyes setled in his his head, to our no small amazement. Forthwith we draw him out stark dead, and to our seeming without shew of life, we threw him into the Lake, when anon he recovered, and swimming to the shore, ran crying away as fast as he could, to the not far distant Ofertia; where they get no small part of their living by shewing this place unto For-reigners. And it is a sport to see how the Dogs thereabout will steal away, and feed to the tops of the Mountains at the approach of a Stranger. The French King Charles the Eighth of that name, who held the Kingdom of Naples for a while, made tryal thereof with an Als, which immediately died. The like befell to a fool-hardy Souldier. Peter of Toledo caused two offenders to be thrust thenceinto, and both expired in a moment. Nor found those three Gallants any better success, who tempted God with their desperate entrance; whercof Scipio Maxella doth report himself to be an eye-witness. This was not unknown to Pliny, who called it the Cave of Charon. The cause of so deadly an effect is said to proceed from the fervent vapours ascending by invisible pores, so thin, so dry and subtle, as not to be discerned; yet thickned by the cold that enters at the mouth of the Cave, convert into moisture, which hangs far within on the roof like to drops of Quick-Silver; and such esteemed to be by a number. Carona Pigbius, desirous to inform himself in the mysteries thereof, ventured so far in, as to touch one of those far-off shining drops, and shewed it to his Companions, who entered also, and stayed therein about a minute of an hour; sensibly perceiving the heat to arise from their feet to their thighs, till they did sweat at the brows, without the endamaging of their senses, who return'd, to the wonder of the Guide, that thought they had preserved themselves by enchantments. By this their experiment it appears that the air is most deadly near to the pores where it first ascended; especially to such Creatures as hold their heads downward, exhaling at their nostrils the dry and excessive hot vapours. Thrust a Torch near the bottom, and it will forthwith go out; yet advanced higher, re-inflames, which approves the former assertion.

A The Lake of Agnano. B Charon's Cave. C St. Germain's Steep.

From hence we pass'd to the Court of Vulcan; aloft, and near to the ancient Puteoli, but distant a mile and better from the new. These Mountains were called Leucogei by the Greeks, in regard of their whiteness: and Phtegrean Fields, for that Hercules here overthrew the barbarous people, who were called Giants for their inhumanity and insolencies; assisted with Lightning from Heaven:

*Fumant adhuc volvens vesana incendia tellus,
Et misist ardeantem sulphure ructat aquas.*
Portacel.

*TV Earth with inbowell'd flames, yet fuming glows;
And water with fier'd Sulphur mixt, up throws:*

where whereupon grew the Fable of their warring with the gods. But hear we Petronius describing it;

*A place deep sunk in yawning cliffs, 'twixt great Dicarchea and Parthenope, repleat
With black Cocytus waves: for winds that strain
To rush forth there, a deadly heat contain.
The earth's fruits in Autumn bears not, nor glad field
Once puts on green; or sprouting branches yield
Their vernal songs. But Chaos and rag'd stone
Smirch'd with black Pumice, there rejoice, o're-grown
With mournful Cypriss. Dis his head here raises, Cover'd with ashet, and with funeral blazes.*

*Est locus excavo penitus emeris hiatus,
Parthenopen inter magis Dicarchidos arva:
Cocyti perfluit aqua, nam spiritus extra
Qui sunt effusus funello surgitur aestu.
Non hæc Autumnus celus vitem, nec alie herbas
Cespitis latus ager: non verna perfrons cantus;
Mollita discordi strepitu virgula loquuntur,
Sed Chaos & nigro squalentia tumice saxa
Gaudens ferali circum tummata Cyressello.
Has inter sedes Ditis pater exultat ora
Bulorum flammis, & cana spavilla pavilla.*

Petr. Arbut. Satyris.

A naked level it is, in form of an oval, twelve hundred forty and six foot long, a thousand broad, and environed with high-cliff Hills that turne on each side, and have their sulphurous favour transported by the winds to places far distant. You would think, and no doubt, think truly, that the hungry fire had made this Valley with continual feeding; which breaks out in a number of places. And strange it seemeth to a stranger, that men dare walk up and down with so great a security; the earth as hot as sufferable, being hollow underneath; where the fire and water make a horrible rumbling conjoining together, as if one were fuel to the other; here and there bubbling up, as if in a Cauldron over a Furnace; and sprouting aloft into the air, at such time as the Sea is enraged in Tempests. In some place of the colour of Water which is mingled with Soor, in others as if with Lime, according to the complexion of the several Minerals. The flames do many times flit places, abandoning the old, and making new eruptions (the mouths of the vents environed with yellow Cinders) arising with so strong a vapour, that stones thrown in are forthwith ejected. Yet for all these terrors, it is hourly trod upon both by men and horses, and restored unto by the dilaed, in May, June, and July, who receive the fume at their mouths, ears, nostrils, and such other parts of their bodies as are ill affected; which heateth, but hurteth not; that being only sovereign that evaporateth from Brimstone. It mollifieth the Sinews, sharpeneth the Sight, allwageth the pains of the Head and Stomach, makes the barren pregnant, cures violent Feavers, Itches, Ulcers, &c. From January to October the Husbandmen hereabout do stir their gleab at such time

T 3

time as much smoke doth arise, and that they know that it proceedeth from Sulphur, which doth add to the soil a marvelous fertility. From hence they exact yearly three thousand pounds weight, whereof the Bishop of Putzole hath the tithe. Another kind of Sulphur is gotten here, not taken from the fire, but found in the earth, of especial use for the dying of hair, and familiarly experimented by women. White Salt, Armonack is here found also, which belongeth to the aforesaid Bishop. At the foot of this Fountain that regardeth the East, are Minerals of Alom, and the best of the world, whereof, one part was given to the Hospitals of St. Martha, and the Annunciation; and the other belonged to a private Lord. But lest the Papacy should be thereby diminished, (for they make of Alom a principal Revenue) the Pope, on pain of his heavy curse, did prohibit the labourers. Afterward Pius the Fourth brought out the owner of the one half for the yearly rent of twelve thousand Ducates, and Gregory the Thirteenth by the payment of five and twenty thousand, extinguished that annuity; the Masters of the Hospitals having in the mean time abused their interest in the other. In the top of the Mountain are certain little veins of a white matter like Salt, much used by Skinners; whereof a water is made, that forthwith putteth out all characters that are written in paper. The flower of Brasi is here found every where, excellent and transparent, with white Nitre. This place is said by the Roman Catholics to be disquieted with Devils; and that the fire underneath is a part of Purgatory, where departed Souls have a temporal punishment. The Friars that dwell hard by in the Monastery of St. January report that they often do hear fearful shrieks and groanings. They tell also a late story of a certain youth of Apulia, a Student in Naples, who desperate in his fortunes, advised with the Devil, and was persuaded by him to make him a deed of guilt of himself, and to write it with his own blood; with doing whereof he should in short time recover his losses. Believing the deluder, according to appointment he came unto this place with that execrable writing: when affrighted with the multitudes of Devils that appeared unto him, he fled unto the aforesaid Monastery, and acquainted the Prior with all that had hapned. He communicated it to the Bishop (now or late living) who informed the Pope thereof, by whose command he was cast into Prison, and after condemned to the Gallies. Possible it is that this may be true; but Damianus the reporter of that which followeth (though a Cardinal) might have had the Whetstone, if he had not alledged his Author, who telleth of a number of hideous Birds which accustomed to arise from hence on a sudden in the evening of the Sabbath, and to be seen until the dawning of the day, stalking on the tops of the Hills, stretching out their wings, and pruning their feathers, never observed to feed, nor to be taken by the art of the Fowlers; when upon the croaking of the Raven that chased them they threw themselves into these filthy waters: said to be damned souls tormented all the week long, and suffered to refresh themselves on the Sabbath, in honour of our Saviours resurrection. This he reports from the mouth of the Arch-Bishop Umbertus. But if this be Hell, what a desperate end made that unhappy German, who not long since slipped into these Furnaces? or what had his poor Horse committed, that fell in with him, that he should be damned, at least retained in Purgatory: the matter that doth nourish these subterranean fires, is Sulphur and Bitumen. But there it is fed by the latter, where the flame doth mix with the water, which is not by water to be extinguished: approved by the composition of those ignes admirabiles.

From hence descending a little, we came to the ruins of a magnificent Amphitheatre, environing, in an oval, a Court an hundred threescore and twelve feet long, and fourscore and eight over, thrown down by an earth-quake not many ages since, which here happen not seldom, by the violence of inflamed and suppressed vapours. Dedicated it was to Vulcan, and not without cause, he seeming in these parts to have such a sovereignty. An Amphitheatre consists of two joined Theatres, and is thereof so called; containing no Stage, and consecrated commonly unto Mars, in that spectacles only of blood and death were there exhibited to the people, as sword-playings, combatings with wild beasts, compelling of the condemned to personate Tragedies, and acts but feigned to perform in earnest. Sword-players (who were first introduced by Junius Brutus, in the funeral of his Father) first begun with slaves, and then with swords to shew their arts and courages. But in latter times they entered the lists naked; their skill in defence not so much regarded or praised, as the undaunted giving or receiving of wounds, and life unfearedly parted with. The wearied or vanquished were supplied by others; and he bare the Palm away, to whom none succeeded. Whereof Martial, of Hermes:

Hermes

Hermes terror of his own,
Hermes whom Aelius fears alone,
Hermes who Avolaus overthrows,
Hermes who conquers without blows,
Hermes to whom succeeded none.

Hermes turba sui tremorque Iudi
Hermes quem timer Aelius, sed unum,
Hermes cui cadit Avolaus sed uni,
Hermes vincere, nec ferire doctus:
Hermes suppositus sibi ipsi.
L. 5. Epig. 25.

When maimed, when old (sometimes for their valour) they were manumitted, and then no more to expose their persons to such hazard. Nero, that enemy of mankind, exposed four hundred Senators, and six hundred Knights, in those disgraceful combatings. And Domitian, that other Monster, produced women to under-go the like in the night.

Th'unkilful sex, not fit for broils,
In bloody fights too man-like toils:
Tom, at Tanais, would have thought,
Or Phasis, Amazons had fought.

Stat sexus rudis insicque ferri,
Et pugnas capit improbus viriles,
Credas ad Tanaim, serunque Phasin,
Thermodonticas calere turmas,
Stat. Silo. 6. l. 1.

And to combat with beasts; whereof that gross flatterer:

'Tis not enough that Mars whom war delights,
Draws wounding steel: for Caesar Venus fights.
The Lion slain in vast Nemean Vale,
(Alcides noble labour) Fame retails,
Peace gray Belief: since Caesar's great command,
We see this acted by a woman's hand.

Belliger invidis quod Mars tibi fecit in armis,
Non satis est Caesar, saviæ ipsa Venus.
Prostratum Nemeæ & vasta in valle leonem,
Nobile & Herculeum fama canebat opus.
Prica fides taceat: nam post tua munera, Caesar,
Hæc jam foemina vidimus acta manu.

Mart. Speil. Epig. 6.

Histories not only affirm that the Emperour Commodus did play the Gladiator, but his Statue in this fashion is yet to be seen at Rome, in the Palace of Ferense. Those that were condemned to fight with wild beasts were produced in the mornings; the horror whereof was such, that women were prohibited to behold them: where the killers in the end were killed, and no way left to avoid destruction. A memorable accident is reported by Seneca, (at which himself was present) of a Lion that took knowledge of one who had been in times past his Keeper; and not only forbore him himself, but defended him from the fury of others. It should seem to be that Bond-slave Androclus (for the times do agree) who is mentioned by Appian. Some for hire, and

and some in bravery undertook to encounter with such beasts, who either perished, or made way by victory unto safety. An hundred Lions were often at once let forth into the Court of the Amphitheatre, and often beasts were set against beasts, a less savage spectacle. But O wicked delight of these barbarous Tyrants, worthy to suffer what they inflicted! who caused miserable wretches to make Histories of Fables, and put in act imaginary miseries. They being most prais'd of the dry-eyed beholders, that expos'd themselves unto death without terrors; either by taking it from the weapon of another, or by falling on their own, as the Fable required. Nor matter'd it who had the part to survive, he being but reserved for another days slaughter. And sometimes they err'd in the story, to make the Catastrophe more horrid, as in that of Orpheus; who although said to have been cut in pieces by the Ciconian wives, was represented to be torn in pieces with a Bear. The manner thus described by Martial:

Quidquid in Orphæo Rhodope spectasse theatro
Dicitur, exhibuit, Cæsars, arena tibi
Reperitur (scopuli mirandaque silva ecurrit,
Quale fuisse nenus credidit Heperidum;
Assuit inmixtum pecudum genus omne ferarum;
Et supra Vatem multa pependit avis,
Ipse sed ingrato jacuit laceratus ab Urso.
Hæc tamen res est facta, ita ficta alia est.

Spell. Ep. 21.

The floor of the Amphitheatre was covered with sand, to drink up the blood that was shed thereon. Augustus Cæsar did redress the disorders of this in Puteole, committed in the confused placing of themselves; assigning particular Rooms to every degree according to their dignities. But when the Romans here shew'd their greatest bravery, when Nero entertained the Armenian Tyrists, who from the uppermost round did wound two Bulls at one throw, to the wonder of the beholders; Theodoric, King of Goths, did utterly abolish these execrable pastimes. For what could be more inhumane, than to give the condemned life, that they might take it from each other by mutual slaughter? a flame it was to groan at the recit of a wound, to pull back their throats from the steel; or to behold their blood with other eyes than if it had been the blood of an enemy. The reliques of this is now over-grown with Briers and Thorns, standing upon arched Concaves, yet almost intire, having several divisions, wherein, I suppose, they kept the wild beasts, and those that were to be devoured by them; from thence exhibited to the spectacle. Under the earth here are a number of Vaults, with such perplexed passages, that hardly can be got out that enters without a line or conductor; wherupon it is called the Labyrinth. In which are a world of Bats that hide themselves from the hated day; and will put out your lights with fluttering about it not the better guarded. Some say, that this was made to retain water for the use of the beholders; why not rather for the use aforesaid? Descending from hence, by the ruins of the old Colony, we came unto Puteole (eight miles distant from Naples) and called formerly Puteoli.

That name it took, under Hannibal, of the many Pits there digg'd; or of the smell of the waters arising from Mines of Brimstone and Alom. Called it was more anciently Dicarchia, which signifieth a just government; being a Greek Colony, and built by the Samians, at such time as Tarquinius Superbus ruled in Rome. A Port Town, and that it was of the Cumans; amplified by the Roman Emperors in such sort, as called Little Rome, by Cicero. Whole Walls, Havens, Temples, Academy, Theatre, Baths, Statues, &c. (some of them yet shewing their foundations) sufficiently declare the Roman magnificency; polluting a part of the Mountain as well as the Shore, and supposed to contain four miles in circumference. Nephtune was of this City the Patron: the ruins of whose Temple are yet to be seen, hard behind the Duke of Tesle's Orchard, where we refresh'd our selves during the heat of the day. A place of surpassing delight, in which are many excellent Statues, recovered from the decays of antiquity, and every where Fountains of fresh water, adorned with Nymphs and Satyrs: where the artificial Rocks, Shells, Moles, and Tophans, seem to excel even that which they imitate. This was made by the afore-mentioned Peter of Tesle, at such time as Puteole was abandoned by the Inhabitants, by reason of fearful Earth-quakes, and the horrible conflagrations of the New Mountains; building on the other side of the way, a fair Palace, thereby to animate the people to return. For over the entrance stands this engraven Inscription:

mate

PETRUS TOLETUS MARCHIO VILLÆ FRANCHÆ, CAROL. IV. IMP. IN REGNO NEAP. VICARIUS. UT PUTEOLANOS OB REGENTEM ACRI CONFLAGRATIONEM PALANTES, AD PRISTINAS SEDES REVOCARET, HORTOS, PORTUS ET PONTES MARMOREOS, EX SPOLIIS QUÆ GARSÆ FILIUS, PARTA VICTORIA AFRICANA REPORTAVERAT, OTIO GENIOQUE DICAVIT: AC ANTIQVORVM RESTAURATO PURGATOQUE DUCTU, AQVAS SITIENTIBVS CIVIBVS SVA IMPENSA RESTITUIT. AN. A PARTU VIRG. M. D. XL.

the Neapolitans following his example. So that now the Town is well stor'd with Buildings; situate for the most part on a little Promontory that stretcheth into the Bay. In the midst whereof is a fair Temple of Marble, of Corinthian structure; having withstood the waste of time, the fury of the Foe, (which to this City hath been often fatal) and injury of Earth-quakes. The stones are so artificially laid, that you would think it confuted by one. It was built by Lucius Calphurnius, and dedicated to Augustus, as appeareth by these extant characters:

L. CALPHURNIUS. L. F. TEMPLVM
AUGUSTO, CVM ORNAMENTIS, D. D.

the name of the Architector adjoined:

L. COCCIEVS. L.
C. POSTVM I. L.
AUCTVS. ARCHITECTVS.

But now re-dedicated to St. Proculus. The Giants bones here shewn unto Foreigners, must not be unspoken of; confirming what hath been formerly spoken.

Learn thou, whom Giants bones astonish, why,
Thy in Hebrew soil interred lye.
Then when Alcides did Iberians foil,
And brought from thence their Oxen, a brave spoil,
He from Dicarchean Hills, with club and bow,
The wicked Typhons chas't, Gods, and man's foe.
To Hydruntum part, to Thuscæ fled the rest,
The conquered terror was in both suppress'd.
Their huge corps good Posterity kept here,
To witness to the world that once such were.

Huc quicunque venis stupefactus ad ossa Gigantum
Disce cur hæretico fuit immixta solo.
Tempore quo domitis jam Victor agebat Iberis
Alcides, caprum longa per arva pecus,
Colle Dicarchææ clavaque arcuque Typhones
Expulsi; & cessat noxia turba Deo.
Hydruntum petiit pars, & pars altera Thucos:
Interiit victus terror utroque loco.
Hinc bona Posteritas inhumana corpora servat,
Et tales mundo testificatur avos.

Pomp. Laus.

At the foot of the Hill whercon the City is mounted, the ruined Peer doth present a remarkable object; which extending towards the West made heretofore a safe and excellent Haven. Arched like a Bridge, that the flowing in of the Sea might preserve the profundity thereof from being choked with rubbidge and earth born down with the fall of Torrents. The work it was of the Grecians; much assisted in the building by the admirable nature of the sand herabout, by reason of the under-burning fire, and perhaps partaking of the bitumeneous matter, becoming as hard and durable as the solid Rock, when mixed with lime, and placed under the water.

Dicarchean dust transported, solid grows
In water plac'd: whose hardened mass contains Huge Structures seated on the liquid plains,

— Dicarchææ translatus pulvis arena,
Intraus solidatur aquis! duratque massa
Sustinet adæcto peregrino in gurgite campos.
Sidon. palm.

As yet is here every where to be seen, by the huge Foundations demolished above, and entire underneath; encouraging men thereby to build so far into the Sea, as they anciently did round about this Bay. The Emperour Constantine is said to have transported certain Ship-ladings of this Sand unto Constantinople. The body of this mass

mass consisteth of Brick, but was covered heretofore with Marbles, which afforded a delightful walk on the top. What should I speak of the Emperours that repaired it, (whose names are yet retained in stone) or of the Arch erected thereon, since the whole is utterly defaced? Yet rather by Earthquakes, than the violence of the Sea; whereof thirteen great Piles now only remain, which appear like to many square Towers in the water; the Arches thrown down that conjoined them. To this Caligula joined his Bridge (a prodigal, and not to be exemplified vanity) which stretched over the Bay unto Baie, three Miles and a half distant: sustained by Ships (drawn hither from all parts of his Empire) placed in two ranks, made stable with innumerable Anchors, and crossed with a broad High-way of earth. Which he did, as it is said, in imitation of Xerxes, who built the like over the less broad Hellespont: others say, that it was to terrifie the Germans and Britans, by the performance of such wonders; with whom he was to begin a War. But indeed he was incited thereunto to fulfil the prediction of Thrasyllus the great Astrologer, who told Tiberius, inquiring who should be his Successor, and desiring to confer the Empire upon his own Nephew, that Caligula was no more likely to be Emperour, than to ride on Horseback over the Bay of Baie. Upon this Bridge Caligula passed to and fro, for two days together; having before sacrificed to Neptune and Emy. The first day gallantly mounted, wearing an Oaken Garland upon his head, and a Cloak of Gold on his shoulders; the next, in the Habit of a Charioter, drawn by two Steeds of a famous breed; carrying before him Darius, a noble Youth, that was left in Hostage by the Parthians, attended upon by the Prætorian Souldiers, and followed by his principal Favourites and Friends in Waggon of the British fashion. When calling many from the shore, he caused them all to be tumbled from the Bridge for his cruel pastime; and those to be beat off with Oaks and Staves that endeavoured their own safety. Such were the monstrous follies, and barbarous delights of this Monster. Much more we might write of Puteoli: but we pursue our first intention, which is only to note what is principally note-worthy. We will therefore depart with this salutation:

Salve urbs deliciae, quondam curisque levamen,
Gratæque Romulidis post fera bella quietæ.
Stant ubi nunc ætatis mirabilis Amphitheatri
Sæcæ, columnæ, arcus, diruta templâ, viz.
Impositæ pelago moles testantur honores:
Et tuæ quæ fuerit gloria, quale decus.
Fron. Vivin.

Hail erst delightful City; cares release,
To Romans (hence war past) a Port of Peace.
Amphitheatre, Temples now laid low,
Ways, Arches, Columns, yet their ruins show.
Huge Piles fixt in the toyling seas declare
Thy old renown, how glorious once and fair.

Taking here a Felucco we rowed along the bottom of the Bay; first passing by Cicero's Villa, even at this day to called, where yet do remain the ruins of his Academy, erected in imitation of that at Alcibi (the pleasure whereof he commendeth in his Writings;) which he adorned with a Schoola Grove, an open Walk, a Gallery, and a Library. After his proscription and death, this Villa became the possession of Antistius Vetus a follower of Cæsar: where Tyro, Cicero's Free-man, lived till he was an hundred years old, and in three Books composed the life of his Patron. Now long after his death divers Fountains of hot water sprung out of the earth, held Sovereign for the eye-sight: celebrated by Tullius Laurea, (so called for his excellency in poetic) another of his Free-men, in this Epigram.

Quo tus Romanæ vindex, clarissima lingvæ,
Silva loco melius surgere iussa viret?
Ayque Academiæ celebratam nomine Villam,
Nunc reparat cultu sub meliore Verus:
Hic etiam apparent Lymphae, non ante repetæ;
Languida quæ infusum lumina rose levanti;
Nimirum locus ipse sui Ciceronis honori
Hoc cedit hæc fontes cum patefecit ope:
Ue quoniam totum leguer sine fine per orbem,
Sint plures oculis quæ medecatur aquæ.

Of Roman speech thou fam'd Restorer, where Couldst thy Groves, bid to grow, thrive fo as here!
Thy Villa nam'd an Academic, doth host
By Vetus now repair'd with greater cost:
Here all Springs, unsound before, arise:
Whose dropt-in water comforts feeble eyes.
No marvel though this place doth thus produce,
For Tullius sake, streams of such sovereign use,
That being thorow the whole world read, they might
More waters yield to cure decaying sight.

Here the Emperour Adrian was buried; Antoninus erecting a Temple in the place of his Sepulchre. The ruins do shew that the Buildings were ample: amongst the rest, the foundation of that (as supposed) Academy is yet to be seen, in form of a Cirque, three hundred and seventy foot long, and so called. Now all is overgrown with Briars; and Sheep and Goats are pastured where the Mules had once their habitation. It was feared close to the water; inasmuch as Cicero accustomed to feed the Fishes out of his Windows, and to take them for his pleasure with an Angle. But now the Sea hath forsaken it, forced by Earth-quakes to retire, and content it self with more narrow bounders; having in times past possessed the present possessions of the Dukes of Toledo, whereof a part interposed it and the Villa. The foresaid Fountains, called Cicero's Baths, are to be seen in a Grot at the foot of a Rock, of a marvellous nature and virtue. For they ebb and flow, according to the quality of the Sea, filling with fuming waters the place of their receptacle. Which when over-swelling a part thereof proceeds to the Sea, and another part retires to their Fountains. They assuage the pains of the bowels, and aches of the body, but are good especially for the eyes; declaring thereby that they participate of Copperas.

of

West of this stands the eminent Gaurus; a stony and desolate Mountain. In which there are divers obscure Caverns, choaked almost with earth, where many have consumed much fruitless industry in the searching for treasure. Hither come such from sundry parts as boast themselves to be skilful in Magick; but have returned with no other profit, than to know the vanity of that knowledge. The common people, bewitched with the like persuasions, to dig and delve with undefatigable toil; and oft do meet, instead of hoped for Gold, with the reward of their avarice, buried in mines, or drowned by Springs, or stench with vapour; so they practise the like also about Forum Vulcani. Here they dream of certain Rings of Gold, shining richly with Carbuncles, and they have been seen, but are guarded by Spirits and Goblins. Many are animated by the story of Callicleus, who writes, that Robert Norman did dig up much treasure hereabout, by the labour of the captivated Saracens. But, which is more to be laugh't at, the seeming wise, religious, and learned, do travel in that quest.

Proceeding, we rowed over the yet remaining foundations of ample Buildings; a part of them the ruins of Port Julius:

Or name the Port, the bars to Lucrine fet
And angry Sea that with loud tumults fret:
Where Julius waves resound their fore't recess,
And Tyrrhene floods into Avernus press:

An memorem portus, Lucrinque addita claustra,
Atque indignatum magnis stridoribus æquor,
Julia quæ ponto longe sonant unda refocto,
Tyrrhenuque fretis immittitur æbus Avernii.
Virg. Geor. l. 2.

built by Julius Cæsar (and therefore so named) at the Senates appointment: For that those who hired the fishing of that Lake adjoining, were damnified much by the violent breaking in of the Seas; whereof a part he excluded by these crooked moles, and left a narrow space for the Fishes to enter. Thus Servius; But Suetonius doth give the honour thereof to Augustus; effected by the labour of twenty thousand manumitted Servants, who gave it that name, of the name of the Family whereof he was defended by the Mother.

Here landed we: And here once was the famous Lake of Lucrinus; separated then from the Sea by a Bank of eight furlongs long, and so broad as afforded convenient way for a Chariot. The labour, as supposed, of Hercules.

Herculean way commends, in surges rear'd,
When Amphitridæ drove th' Iberian herd,
And thronging Seas repuls'd.

Medioque in gurgite ponti
Herculeum commendat iter, quâ dispulsi æquor
Amphitryoniades armenti victor Iberi.
Sil. Ital. l. 2.

But when so broken down, as hardly affording a passage, it was repaired by Agrippa. So Strabo reporteth, but makes no mention of the aforesaid Port Julius.

He tells how Lucrine was Cocytus nam'd:

At hic Lucrino mansisse vocabula quondam
Cocytis memorat — Idem.

Lucrinus it seems to have been called of the gain that was made by the Fishes therein taken. But the Oysters herof had the principal reputation; whereof Martial,

Old nench, than Swans more sweet to me by far,
More soft than Phalerum Galeses Lamb.
More delicate than Lucrine Oysters are.

Puella senior, dulcior mihi cygnis,
Agnæ Galesis mollior Phalerini,
Concha Lucrini delicatior stagni.
l. 5. Ep. 38.

Perhaps

Perhaps he therefore giveth to the Lake the name of Lascivious :

*Dom nos blanda tenent lascivi stagna Lucrini,
Et quæ pumices fontibus antra calent.
l. Epir. 137.*

*We haunt lascivious Lucrines pleasant Lake,
And Caves, which heat from Pumice Mountains take.*

if not for being frequented by Women in their evening solaces. But believe who that will, the story of the Dolphin frequenting this Lake, reported by Pliny upon the testimony of Mecenas, Flavianus, and Flavius Aelius, who inserted it in their Chronicles, said to have hapned not long before this time, in the Reign of Augustus. This Dolphin, they say, was enamoured on a Boy, a poor mans Son of Baie, who went to School daily to Puteoli. He about Noon accustomed to repair unto the water side, and to call upon the Dolphin by the name of Simo, and feeding him with bread, so allured him unto him, that in a short time he could no sooner call Simo but the Dolphin would approach, and offer his back to be ascended, clapping close his sharp back-bus, and so conveyed him to Puteoli, and back again. Apian doth witness as much, and Solinus: that it became so ordinary a spectacle, that no body admired it. But it was more strange; the Boy being dead, and the Dolphin keeping his accustomed haunts, and still missing of him, pined away with sorrow, and was found dead on the shore, whom they laid in his Sepulchre. Pausanias doth report himself to have been an eye-witness almost of the like. And Pliny speaks of another about Hippo, when Flavianus was Proconsul of Africa, that would play with such as bathed in the Sea, suffering himself to be handled, and got up upon. But the hard measure that the Townsmen received from those that came to behold that spectacle caused them to kill him. Jassus, one City, doth afford two examples of their love unto Boys. The one calling himself on shore after him whom he loved, and so died, (Alexander the Great making the Boy Priest unto Neptune, supposing him to be affected of the Sea-god.) The other having often carried a Boy called Hermiar, and on a time overtaken with a Tempest, inasmuch as the Boy perished; the Dolphin brought the dead body to land; and would never again retire to Sea, but thrusting ashore there died for company. If these be true, why may we not credit the story of Arion the Musician (for Dolphins are said to be singularly delighted with Music) related by Herosdotus and others? But because I think it a Fable, I will rather chuse the report of a Poet, who when environed with Swords by the treacherous Mariners:

—Mortem non deprecor, inquit,
Sed liceat sumpta pauca referre lyra.
Dant veniam ridentes moram, capiti ille coronam.
Quæ possit crines, Phœbe, decere tuos.
Induit & Tyrio distinctam murice pallam:
Reddidit idæ suos pollice chorda sonos,
Flebilibus numeris veluti cænentia dura,
Trajectus penna tempora cantat olor.
Procinus in medias ornatus diffili undas,
Spargitur impulsæ caerule puppis aqua.
Inde (sile majus) tergo delphina recurvo
Se memorat oneri puppissulæ novo,
Ille sedet Citharam; tener, pretiumque vehendi
Canat, & æquoreas carmine mulcet aquas.
Ovid Fast 12.

—Not life (quoth he) crave I:
But leave to touch my Harp before I dye.
They give consent, and laugh at his delay,
A Crown that might become the King of day
He puts on, and a fair Robe rarely wrought
With Tyrian Purple. The strings speak his thoughts;
He (like a dying Swan) shot through by some Hard heart) sings his own Epicedium.
And then clob'd as he was, he leaps into
The more safe Seas: whose blue brine upward flow.
When (past belief) a Dolphin seiz'd him on
His crooked back; a burden erst unknown.
There sit, he harp and sings: with that price pays
For Portage: and rude Seas calm with his lays.

Theophrastus also doth mention their loves unto men; and that they abhor not our company, experience doth teach us; who seem as it were to attend on Ships, and converse with the Sailors. This famous Lake extended formerly to Avernus, and so unto the aforesaid Gaurus, but is now no other than a little sedge plash, choaked up by the horrible and affomishing eruption of the new Mountain; whercon as oft as I think, I am easie to credit whatsoever is wonderful.

For who here knows not, or who elsewhere will believe, that a Mountain should arise (partly out of the Lake, and partly out of the Sea) in one day and a night, unto such an height, as to contend in altitude with the high Mountains adjoining; in the year of our Lord 1538. and on the nine and twentieth of September; when for certain days foregoing the Country hereabout was so vexed with perpetual Earth-quakes, as no one house was left so entire, as not to expect an immediate ruine; after that the Sea had retired two hundred paces from the shore (leaving abundance of fish, and Springs of fresh water rising in the bottom) this Mountain visibly ascended about the second hour of the night, with an hideous roaring, horribly vomiting stones, and such store of Cinders as over whelmed all the Buildings hereabout, and the salubrious Baths of Tripurgula for so many Ages celebrated; consumed the Vines to ashes, killing Birds and Beasts; the fearful Inhabitants of Puteale flying through the dark with their Wives and Children; naked, defiled, crying out, and detesting their Calamities. Manifold mischiefs have they suffered by the barbarous; yet none like this which Nature inflicted. But hear we it described by Borgius.

diat

*What gloomy fumes days glorious eye obscure!
The pitchy Lake effus'd through sulphury Caves,
Higher than Ætna's fire throws flaming waves:
Hath Phlegæon broke into Avernus; with groans
Whirling the horrid floods, and rumbling fumes?
The Baian waves rebound: fresh streams ascend,
And several ways their speedy currents bend.
Miserus leas his Trumpet fall, scarce heard,
Sick Prochyta a second ruine fear'd.
Loud roarings from earths smoking womb arise,
And fill with fearful groans the darkned skies.
A sad face doth menace from the West's
Whence sharper plagues the Latian Towns insift.
Thee furious winds to skies huge flames eject,
Which like a compass turn'd about, erect
Around Amphitheatre's; floods of stone
From belching gulf in millions straight forth thrown.*

*Quis fumus turpe niger ora nitentia Solis!
Sulphureis tenebrosa palus effusa cavemis
Fluat: Ætnas eructans altius ignes.
Nunquid Avernalis Phlegæon prorupit in undas,
Terribilis fluctus, & saxa sonantia torquens?
Baianæ reboant undæ, simul agmen aquarum
Dulce fluat celeri fugiens contraria cursu.
Excidit & tremula Miseni buccina dextra,
Rauca sonans, metuit rursus Prochyta ægra ruina.
Eruta viceribus fumantis murgura terre
Terrificis complent piceas mugientes auras,
Tristis ab occais facies, & torva minatur:
Unde laes Latias inscicit terrior urbes,
Tum quæ saxa furens ingentia sepe sub altum
Spiritus emitit caelum, cey Circinus, orbem
Amphitheatrealem struxere ad multa repente
Nulla saxosus revomente voragine fluctus.*

Nor can what they then suffered be ever forgotten, having such a testimony still in view as is this strange Mountain; advancing his top a mile above his basis. The stones hereof are so light and pory, that they will not sink when thrown into the water. The cause of this accident is ascribed unto the neighbourhood of the Sea, and hollowness of the soil; whereby easily ingendred exhalations, being hurried about with a most violent motion, do inflame that dry and bitumenous matter; calling it upward, and making way for their fiery expirations. To those also is the retiring of the Sea to be attributed, which struggling to break forth, doth rarifie, and to raise the earth, which thereby also as it were made thirstily sucks the water through crannies into her spongy, and hot entrails; increasing the vapours, not decreasing the fire by reason of the bitumen. Perhaps Delos and Rhodes, smitten in the first Ages, were made apparent by such means: howsoever, divers of the Æolides were without peradventure; all of them having flamed, and being now more in number than observed by the Ancients. This new Mountain, when newly raised, had a number of issues, at some of them smoking, and sometimes flaming; at others disgorging Rivulets of hot waters, keeping within a terrible rumblings; and many miserably perished that ventured to descend into the hollows above. But that hollow on the top is at this present an Orchard; and the Mountain throughout is bereft of his terrours.

Leaving this Mountain on the right hand, and turning about the brow of a Hill that lay on the left, we came to the Lake Avernus.

*O're which no fowl unstruck with hasty death
Can stretch her strengthless wings; so dire a breath
Mounts high heaven from black jaws: The Creeks the same Avernus call; expressed in the name.*

*Quam super haud ullæ poterant impune volantes.
Tendere iter pennis, talis sese halitus ætris
Faucibus effundens supera ad convexa ferebat,
Unde locum Graii dixerunt nomine Avernum.
Virg. Æn. l. 6.*

circular in form, and environed with Mountains, save there where it seems to have joined with the Lake of Lucrinus, shadowed heretofore with over-grown woods, a main occasion of those pestilent vapours. For they being cut down by Agrippa, the place became frequently inhabited on every side; and proved both healthful, and delightful. This was supposed the entrance into Hell by ignorant Antiquity; where they offered infernal Sacrifice to Pluto, and the Manes, here said to give answers.

V

For

A. The Lake Avernus. B. The Cave, called vulgarly Sibyl's. C. The ruins of Apollo's Temple.

For which purpose Homer brought hither his Ulysses, and Virgil his Æneas:

Quatuor hic primam nigrante terga juvenco
Constituit, fronsque insiergit vina faceros.
Et summa carpens media inter cornua letas,
Ignibus imponit sacris libamina, prima
Voce vocant Hecaten, cœloque Ereboq; potentem.
Supponunt alii cultros, repudumque cruorem
Sollicitum patris: ipse atri velleris agnam
Æneæ matri Eumenidum magnæque forori
Ense ferit, sterilemque tibi Proserpina vaccam:
Tum Stygio Regi nocturnas inchoat aras,
Et solida imponit taurorum viscera flammis,
Pingue superq; oleum fundens ardentibus exitis:
Ecce autem primi, sub lumina solis & ortus,
Sub pedibus ingire solum, & iugæ corpora moveri
Sylvarum, visaque canes ululare per umbram
Adventante Dea—

Æn. l. 6.

And feigned they were to have descended into Hell at this place; for that these thofe Caves were by which the infernal spirits, by the power of magick evoked, were imagined to ascend. As the Devil deluded those times, so do divers these, who affirm that Christ from hence made his triumphant Resurrection. Whereof Eustatius, speaking of the Baths of Tripergula:

Et locus Australis quo portam Christus Avernī
Fregit, & eduxit mortuos inde fuos.
Hæc domus est triplex, hic jure Tripergula dicta.

Southward a place there is, where Christ our head
Broke ope Avernus gate, thence brought his dead;
Th' house triple-form'd, Tripergula well call'd.

And another,

There

There Christ Avernus sad Gates broke in two,
And Holy Fathers thence victorious drew;

Et locus effregit quo portas Christus Avernī,
Et sanctos traxit lucidus inde patres.

Alcadius.

leading them to the top of an high adjoining Mountain, which at this day beareth his name. A tale, as it should seem, not only credited by the vulgar. Here Hannibal did also sacrifice to the Infernals, as is recorded by Livy. Cicero avoucheth this out of an old Poet,

Hard by, Avernus Lake, in shades obscure,
Where Ghosts are rais'd at th' ever-open door
Of Acharon profound—

Inde in vicina nostrā Avernī lacus,
Unde animæ excitantur obscura umbra, aperto ostio
Alti Acheronīs—

whereby it should seem, that Acheron also was the name of Avernus, because Acheron-fia, a Lake near Cuma, did flow hereinto thorow concealed passages. Avernus was also once called Styx, according to Silus,

He shews Avernus, now for pleasant fam'd
The Stygian Lake in former ages nam'd.
Then dreadful in rough Woods, and Caves obscure,
Air stinking (bane to Birds) with breath vomeb
And sacred & brought every Stygian Town,
In their Religion bare a dire renown,

Ille olim populis dictum Styga nomine verſo,
Stagna inter celebrem nunc mita monstrat Avernū:
Tum triste nemore, atque umbris nigrantibus horrens
Ex formidatur volucris, lethale vomebat
Suffuso virus cœlo, Stygiaque per urbes,
Religione sacer sævum retinebat honorem.

The obscurity of the place perhaps did authorize that conjecture, that the Cimmerians here inhabited, of whom we have formerly spoken. The water of the Lake looketh black; so thought heretofore to have done, by reason of the unmeasurable profundity. But later times have found out a bottom, and that it exceedeth not two hundred fifty and three fathoms. No leaf, nor whatsoever falleth thereon, is forthwith ever after to be seen. The water is not to be drunk of, in regard of the ill smelling, and unwhol-some Minerals whereof it participates. Former ages did abstain from the use thereof, for that defiled with humane blood, here wickedly shed in their devilish sacrifices: and that Styx was supposed to flow from thence. Fish it produceth but those small and black; not serving for sustenance, and therefore not fish'd for. In the days of King Robert an incredible number lay dead on the shore, thinking in such sort as no ra-venous creature would taste of them; proceeding, as was thought, by the veins of Brimstone, that then violently burst thereinto, and infected the waters. The Sea was accustomed, when urged with storms, to flow in thorow the Lake of Lucrinus, driving Fishes in with it; but now not only that passage, but a part of Avernus it self is choked by the new Mountain. When the Woods about it were cut down by Agrippa, an Image was found (supposed to be the Image of Calippa) that sweat as if endued with life. And no marvel though the Devil were troubled with the dissolution of such impious customs: though the name were suited to the nature, yet the Lake retaineth the one, having changed the other; for Fowl do now ordinarily frequent it.

On the North-west side are the ruins of a goodly building; some imagine it to have been the Temple of Pluto, others of Apollo, but the more industrious in Antiquities, that it was only a Bannia; perhaps conjectured by the Fountains of hot water adjoining, called by the Country people the Bath of Scassundello; of sovereign virtue for sundry diseases. On the other side of the Lake opens as to the admired Grot, with a ruined Frontispiece, but affording a large and high-roof passage into the Mountain, cut out of the firm Rock, and now cleansed of the rubbish that pestered it, against the late repair hither of the Vice-roy. We entered with Torches: The far and doth these that there in times past it ended not; but, more than conjecture, to have extended unto Esia. And divers say, that it was here rammed up, for that many greedy people, in hope to find treasure, adventured too far in, and were suffocated with vapours, not noysom thereunto when curiously kept by the Romans. After we had gone an hundred and fifty yards forward, turning on the right hand we past thorow a narrow Entry which led into a Room about fourteen foot long, eight broad, and thirteen high; giving yet assurance that it had been richly guilded, and adorned with Azure, and Mosaic work-manship. At the upper end there is a little bench cut out of the Rock, in form of bed,

V. 2

bed; whereon our guide would needs make us believe that Sibyl lay, and from hence gave her Oracles, of purpose to fave a labour in conducting us to Cuma. Yet is this generally mis-called the Grot of Sibyl, for what habitation could a place so dark and sultry have afforded? Within this Room a low square Door gives passage to another, wherein there is water; a witness that it was a bath, and made for that purpose; confirmed by another on the other side, which for brevity I pass over.

Before we depart from Avernus, fit it is that we speak of the audacious project of Nero, who attempted to have made a Navigable Fols between this and the Ostia, an hundred and threecore miles long, and of that breadth that two great Gallies might pass by each other, along the craggy Shore, and throw opposite Mountains (a tract delitute of waters, save only in the Marishes of Pompinia) to fail by the Sea, and not in the Sea. A work of intolerable labour. But he that desired to effect incredible things commanded that no Malefactor should suffer, but that all the Prisoners throughout the whole Empire should be conveyed thither, and employed herein. Severus and Celerus were the over-seers of the work, and the contrivers, men of wit and impudency to attempt by Art what Nature had prohibited. They began to dig throw the adjoining Mountains, which yet retain the impression. A lasting Monument of over-weening hopes, and frantick prodigality; the Inhabitants at this day do call it Licola.

But now we will lead you to the ruins of Cuma, that was the most ancient City of Italy, built by the Cretians of Chalcis, a City of Eubæa; who seeking an habitation planted themselves in Ænaria, an Island hard by, and after removed to this place, being then un-inhabited. The Generals, Hipocles, Cumeus, and Megasthenis of Chalcis, agreeing between themselves, that the one should have it, and the other should name it. So the Chalcians built, and possessed it, but named it Cuma. Others say, that it was so named of the waves of the Sea, or of repose (for the name doth signifie the same) then having ended their long navigations, or rather of a woman being great with child, whom they there found sleeping, which they took as a lucky sign of succeeding fecundity, approved by the sequel. For in process of time they sent forth divers Colonies, the Erectors and Lords of Puteoli, Falapolis, and Naples; and were Sovereigns of the adjoining Campania, governing their flourishing Commonwealth with the wife and honest Pythagorean discipline. Hither Virgil bringeth his Æneas,

Et tandem Euboicis Comarum allabitur oris.
Æn. l. 6.

Who toucht at length Eubæan Cumæan shore which shewed it to have been ere the Wars of Troy, if his testimony be of credit. Before the Kings were expelled Rome, it was governed by Tyrants, (not so called for their cruelty and oppression, as they are at this day, but for their absolute authority) of whom Aristodemus was not the least famous, and in the end the most infamous. Afterwards they were oppressed by the Campanians, but the Romans in the end both subjugated them, and their oppressors. And as the rest of Campania grew populous, and greatly affected through the Roman luxury, so Cuma decreased both in people and repute, becoming a place of retirement for men of mean and obscure condition, whercof Juvenal, upon the departure from Rome of his poor friend Umbritius:

Quamvis digressu veteris confusus amici,
Laudo tamen vacuis quod sedem figere cumis
Desinere, atque unum civem donare Sibyllæ;
Janua Baiarum est, & gratum litus amœni Secellus.

Sat. 3.

Grieved at my friends remove, him yet I praise
That will in quiet Cuma end his days,
And give one Citizen to Sibyl more;
Of Baia 'tis the gate and grateful shore
Of sweet retirement.

It surveyeth the Tyrrhene Sea, being mount'd upon a not easily approached Promontory, whole skirts are beaten with the unquiet surges; strongly walled in later times, and fortified with Bulwarks, in such sort, as Tullia, and Tela, two Kings of the Goths, did make it the receptacle of their treasure. But now left desolate, there is nothing to be seen but a confusion of ruins, pieces of Walls, broken down Aqueducts, defaced Temples, foundations of Theatres to be admired, Caves, &c. But hear we the Napoleitan Sannazarus.

Here

Here where the walls of famous Cuma bore
Alfio's the chief pride of the Tyrrhene shore,
Frequented by the sawny Traveller,
To view thy Tripods, Delius, from afar;
Whole Ports the wondering Sailors did invite
To seek the proofs of Dædalus his flight: [friend?]
(Who would have thought it then when Fates did
Now high woods harbour to th' wild beasts do lend.
That Cave the Shepherds flock doth nightly fold,
Which Sibyls Mystries contain'd of old.
And Birds and Serpents do inhabit where
The sacred Fathers erst assembled were.
Thy Porch full of noble Imaginary,
Oppressed with their own weight, prostrate lie.
Fanes, once with Trophies fill'd, are now laid low.
And grafs on the distracted gods doth grow.
So many adornments, rare works, sepulchres,
And pious urns, one ruine now inters.

On the East-side of the winding Hill a Cave there is with a Marble Frontispiece; (wherunto Nature had made an access) hewn out of the Rock, extending under the ruined Walls, and admirably spacious. Here had that famous Sibyl her being, called Cimmeria, of a Town hard by, where she was born, and Cumea of this place where she prophesied: yet others affirm that it was Erythraea, who removing thither was called Cumea; and flourished both before, and after the Trojan Wars; with whom Æneas consulted. The manner of her prophesying thus Virgil describeth,

There shall you see the frantick Prophetess,
Sing Destinies within a Caves recess,
And words commit to leaves: What Verse she're
So writ, she sets in order, and leaves there.
They firmly keep the place to each assign'd.
But she, when the doors open, and rude wind
In rushing whisks the light leaves to and fro,
Nor cares to catch, nor them to re-below
In their first form: To seek, unsought-for Fate
They thence depart; and Sibyls mansion hate.

Infaniam vatem alpicies, quæ rupe sublima
Fata canit, folisque notata & nomina mandat;
Quæcumque in foliis descriptis carmina Virgo,
Digerit in numerum, atque antro seculæ relinguit;
Illa manent immota locis, neque ab ordine cedunt;
Verùm eadem, verò tenuis cum cardine ventus
Impulsi, & teneras turbavit janua frondes,
Nunquam deinde cavo volitantia prendere saxo,
Nec revocare frus, aut jungere carmina curat;
Inconsulti abeunt, sedemque odere Sibyllæ.

Æn. l. 3.

Neither did the only give answers in that order, but sometimes by signs, and sometimes by speeches; as appears by what followed.

The Prophetess intreats that willingly
She sing, and her Oraculous tongue unite,

Quin adeas vatem, precibusque Oracula poscas
Ipsa canat, vocemque volens, atque ora resolvat.
Idem.

And again,

Ambiguously she sings, the Cave rebounds,
Truth folding in dark phrase

Horrendas canit ambages, antroque remugit,
Obscuris vena involvens
Æn. l. 6.

It is reported of these Sibyls, (for many of them there were, and that was a general name unto them all) that they understood not themselves what they had said, nor remembered it, delivering their Oracles in rude and unpolished Verse, obscurely and perplexedly; being uttered out of a phrantic wit when possessed by the Spirit. Which when Virgil's Sibyl perceived to come upon her,

Time serves, said she, now ask and know thy Fates:
The God, behold the God! Before the gates;
Thy faying, her looks change, the white disjuncts
The red, red white's; hair stands on end, breast pants;
Her heart with fury swells; she shews more great:
Nor speaks with humane voice, now when recast
With the inspiring power

Pollicere fata
Tempus, ait: Deus, ecce Deus! levi talia fœci
Ante fores, subito non vultus, non color unus,
Non comæ manere comæ; sed pectus anhelum
Et rabie fera corda tument, majorque videtur;
Nec mortale sonans, affata est numine quando
Jam propiore Dei.
Idem.

And when Æneas had ended his Orisons,

At Phœbi nondum patiens immanis in antro
Baccharat vates, magnum si pectore possit
Excussisse Deum; tanto magis ille fatigat
O's rabidum, fera corda domans, fingitque premendo.

Yet brooking Phœbus ill, about stings she,
Disfranch't, her breast strives from his power to free.
The more her forward tongue be forc'd; & tames
Her sturdy heart; and both to his will frames.

Such turbulent extasies proceeded, without question, from a diabolical possession. But surely a peaceable and better spirit did inspire them with those heavenly Divinations of our Saviour; of whom, if we will give credit unto those eight Books now extant under their names, they speak more fully and perspicuously than many of the sacred Prophets. For whereas Elijah saith; Behold, a Virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son; one of them is made to lay,

Marie de Virginis alvo
Exorta est nova lux, &c.
Sibyl. Orat. l. 8.

From Maries Virgins womb
A new light is up-brung—

both naming him, and the place of his birth, with an History as it were of his Life, his Death, and Resurrection. Whereby it doth give cause of strong conjecture, that these Books had much inserted into them after the event, (whereof some of the Fathers are suspected) the History besides being orderly related, though written by divers, and in divers Ages. So that the whole being to be misdoubted, in that finished in part, or the true from the untrue not distinguishable, we are rather to believe those that have the testimony of time for their approbation. As that Prophecy of our Saviour by this of Cumæa; borrowed from her by Virgil (as he confesseth) though perhaps not applied by him where it was meant, but left at random to be confirmed by event, and mix'd with his fictions.

Jam nova progenies cœlo dimittitur alto:
Tu modo nascenti puero que ferrea primùm
Definet, et toto iugiter gens aurea mundo,
Casta fave Lucina; tuus jam regnat Apollo, &c.
Te duce si qua incertis sceleris vestigia nostris,
Irrita perpetua solvent formidine terras.
Ille Deum viram accipiet, Divique videbit
Permixtos heros, & ipse videbitur illis.
Bacatumque reget patris virtutibus orbem.
At ubi prima pueri nati manifesta cultu,
Errantes hederas passim cum baccare tellus;
Mistisque ridenti Colocasia fundet Acantho,
Ipse lacte domum referent dissenta capellæ
Ubera; nec magno metuens armenta leones.
Ipsa tibi blandos fundent cunabula flores.
Occidet & serpens & fallax herba veneni, &c.
Aggredere, & magnos, aderit jam tempus honores,
Chara Deum soboles, in magnum Jovis incrementum.
Aspic conplexo nutantem pondere mundum!
Terrasque trasilique mariq; cœlumque profundum!
Aspic venturo lætentur ut omnia sæclo, &c.

Ecl. 4.

In the midst of this roomy Grot there are three Cisterns hewn out of the floor, wherein it is said that she washed her self, and after covered with a Stole retired into the innermost part of the Cave; where seated aloft on a Temple, she divulged her Oracles. This is the fate that foretold of the destruction of Troy; and withal of the invention of Homer: who hath inserted sundry of her Verses into his Poems, and said to be that sung the Roman Destinies. But I cannot believe that this was that Sibylla, (although she be called long-lived) that brought those three Books to sell unto Tarquinius Superbus: yet of Cumæa she was, for divers Sibyls there were of this place, all Priests to Apollo: (who here was served only by Virgins) in his not far distant Temple; but rather she whom they called Amalthea, although it be to be imagined that her Books contained also the prophecies of the former, by many of the self-same Verses found at Erythraea. An old unknown Woman demanded for those Books the value of 300 Angels. The King thinking that the doted, both denied to give her that price, and denied her when forthwith she burnt 3; and returning, ask'd as much for the other 6. But Tarquinius cost at her much more than before; whereupon she burnt other three, and yet received the same sum for the remainder. Inasmuch as the King, being moved with her constancy (and advised therunto by the Augurs) gave her the price of the nine for the

A. Ruines of Cumæ.

B. Arco Felice.

C. The Tyrrhene Sea.

the three; she admonishing him that he should keep them carefully; and so departing was never seen after. Others say, that these Books were brought to Tarquinius Priscus, and that he lived in the fiftieth Olympiad. These were kept in Jupiter's Temple adjoining to the Capitol, in a Chest of stone; whereof first 2, then 10, and lastly, 15 Priests (their Interpreters) had the keeping; and a crime unpardonable it was for others to look on them. Never undertook they any great enterprise, nor great calamity befel them, which they endeavoured to remove, but those 15 repaired to these Books of Sibyls, as to an Oracle, and present remedy for all disasters. But those bought by Tarquinius were burnt with the Capitol, in the 173 Olympiad; C. Norbanus and P. Scipio then Consuls. When the Capitol being restored by Sylla the Dictator, and Jupiter's Temple by Q. Catulus, Embassadors were sent by the Senate to Erythraea, and to other Cities of Italy, Greece, and Asia, to make a collection of the Verses of the Sibyls, but especially of hers of Erythraea; who returned with a 1000, but those lame and imperfect: which the 15 had in charge to reform and supply, according to their widows. And although they belonged unto divers Sibyls, yet they were called Cumæan. Tyberius Cæsar made a second search through the World, and caused them again to be refined. Those continued at Rome until the days of Honorius and Theodosius the younger; and then were burned by the Traitor Stilico. Whereof Rutilius Claudius Numanianus:

Nor was't enough to rob with Getick powers,
But first with fire he Sibyls Fates decours.

Nec tantum Geticis graffatur proditor armis.
Ante Sibyllina læta cremavit opus.

But Amianus Marcellinus reports that they were burnt by Julian the Apollata. Although Cumæa be high mounted on a Rock, yet stands it but low in regard of the more lofty Hills, which on the North-side environ it with a Wall; being only separated by a little Valley. Thorow these Nature hath left a passage conjoined by Art with a goodly Arch, called Arco Felice by the Country-people. Whereon once stood that famous Temple of Apollo, remembered by Virgil:

Æneas to the Towers resorts, which high Apollo guards, and the vast Cave hard by
Of reverend Sibyl. Dædalus (same sing.)
From Minos venturing with auspicious wings
Through untrac'd airy ways to take his flight
Towards the cold North-born Chalcidian Tower did light:
There builds a Pen (now footing carib, and free)
And, Phœbus, consecrates his wings to thee.

At pins Æneas arces quibus altus Apollo
Præfider, horrendæque procul secreta Sibyllæ,
Antrum immane petis, &c.
Dædalus, ut fama est, fugiens Minos regna,
Præpetibus pennis ausus se credere cœlo
Invenit per iter gelidas enavit ad Arctos,
Chalcidicæque lens tandem super altis arces;
Reddidi hic primam terris, ubi Phœbe Jactavit
Remigium alarum, polique immania templa.
Æn. l. 6.

Yet by some said to have stood below. The Image of Apollo erected in this Temple was said to weep for forty days together, at such time as the Romans made War against the Achaians, assisting Aristonicus, who had intruded into the possession of Anulus, (base Son unto his Brother) who dying, gave his Kingdom unto the people of Rome: Whereat the Sooth-sayers amazed, held it fit to throw the Statue into the Sea. But the Cumeans perswaded the contrary, alledging that it had done the like in their Wars with Autiochus, and after with Perseus, both which succeeded fortunately to Rome; whereupon oblations and gifts were sent thither by the Senate. So the Sooth-sayers changed their opinions, and declaring that the weeping of Apollo was auspicious to the Romans, because Cuma was a Greek Colony; and that these tears did pretend confusion to the people whom it favoured; and within a while after, they heard news that Aristonicus was taken. Not far off there is a large Cave, called by the people la Grotta di Pietro di Pace, which they say led under ground from thence to Avernus. A report, in my opinion, of credit. For Strabo doth make mention of the fame, and that it was digged by Coccinus; others say, by the Cimmerians, through which this Sibyl passed to Avernus to offer Sacrifice to the Infernals. Whereby that seeming contradiction may be reconciled; which is, that they shew the place of her habitation both at Avernus and Cuma. But this passage is now stoppt up, for the self-same cause that the other was, which leads from thence unto Baie, by us formerly mentioned. The Plain that lies between these Hills and the City is repleat with ruins: where are to be seen the foundations of Temples, Theatres, &c. Under which, no doubt but many admirable Antiquities have their sepulture. Approved by that trial made by Alphonse Fimentius the Viceroy, in the year 1606. who desirous to find out some antick Statues to send into Spain; and hearing that the Husbandmen hereabout turned up with their Ploughs many fragments of Arms and Images, got leave of Orazio Cardinal of Aquaviva, and Archbishop of Naples (to whose Church this soil doth belong) to make further search. When having removed but the upper earth, it was their chance to light on an entire Temple, although crusted together: the Walls and Pavement of polished Marble, circled with a great Corinthian Wreath, with Pillars, and Epitombs of like workmanship, together with a number of defaced Figures excellently wrought: the work as well of the Grecians, as Latines. There they also found the Statue of Neptune, his beard of a blue colour; of Saturn or Priapus (for he held in his hand the Haft of a Sycle); of Vesta, with the top of her hair wound round in a Fillet; of naked Cassio, having a Hat on his head, his Chin a little covered with downe; of Apollo, with long disheveled hair, at whose feet stood a Swan; of Hercules, with a Club, crowned with a Wreath; of Esculapius, or perhaps of Romulus; the Colossus of Augustus Caesar exquisitely formed; of Venus naked, and surpassing beautiful; two Images in Consular Habits; Pallas, the work of an admirable Workman; the armed Statue of an Emperour, with a Sphinx ingraven on his bolon; the Image of a Youth head-bound with a sacred Fillet, clothed only in a shirt girt to him with a painted Zone: Other Women there were in feminine Habits, &c. This should seem to have been built by Agrippa, and dedicated to Angvius, by these here found Characters:

LARES AUGUS.
AGRIPPÆ.

And

POTESTATIS D.
AGRIPPA.

Some think it to have been a Palace; but whatsoever, it testifieth an admirable Building.

Wide of Cuma, and towards the Promontory of Misenus, stands the Lake of Colmsius, stored with filthy waters; yet profitable for the preparing of Lime. Called heretofore Acherusia and Acheron, which is as much to say as, of Sorrow. Avernus and this are said to have recourse unto each other by subterrane passages. Whereof Silius Italicus.

Hinc vicina palus fama est Acherontis ad undas
Pondere iter, ceras flagrant vespagine fauces
Lavæ, et horrendo, aperit telluris hiatus,
Interdumque novo perturbat lumine manes.

'Tis said the neighbour-Lake hence flows unspide
To Acheron, and boiling, openeth wide
The carth blind Cave, and dreadful jaws extends,
Which nimbous d' souls with uncouth light offends,

Servius writes, that Avernus doth spring from Acherusia. The Heathen would not taste of of it, for that (in regard of the heat thereof) they thought that it arose from the infernal Phlegion. The Poets Fable, that Hercules here ascending from Hell, took from his head the Poppy Garland that he wore, and placed it on the Banks, in memorial of his return; since when the Poppy hath been black that hereabout groweth.

Not far from this, the Manor-house of Servilius Vatias pretinned our eyes with her ruins; who was Consul with Aprius Claudius 674 years after the building of the City. He over-threw the Pirats in Cicilia, and triumphed for the same, having taken Coriscus, Olympus, Phasides, Janus, and retaining the name of the latter. Who in the end calling off all publick employments retired to this place. Of which, and of him, thus Seneca to Lucilius; there I perfected the longer, invited by the pleasant shore, which windeth about between Cuma and the Mantion of Servilius Vatias; enclosed on the one side with the Sea, and on the other with the Lake, affording as it were a straight passage, being thickened with a late tempest. For that water, as we know, so provoked, doth often overflow, and unites those Sands which a long calm disunites, by reason of their ficcity. As my manner is, I began to look about me, to see if I could find out any thing that might profit; and bent mine eyes upon the house which sometimes belonged unto Vatias. In this that rich Pretor (for nothing famous but for his retirement) grew old, and for that only was accounted happy. For as often as the friendship of Afinius Gallus, or the hatred of Sejanus, and in the end his love, had destroyed any, (for to have offended him, and to have loved him, was equally dangerous) men would say, O Vatias, thou only knowest how to live! yet knew not he how to live, but how to conceal himself. Great is the difference betwixt leading the life vacantly, and leading it slothfully. I never past by this house of Vatias, but I said, Here Vatias lay buried. Of the house it self I can write nothing certainly; I only knew it by the out-side, and as it expothed it self to the view of the passenger. Two Caves there are of excellent workmanship, both made by Art, and both alike spacious; the one never receiveth the Sun, and the other retaineth it until Sun set. A little Brook there runneth divided by Art thorow a Grove of Plantanes, devoured by the Sea and Acherusia; sufficient for the nourishing of Fish, although daily taken. When the Sea is composed they spare them, but take them when enraged with Storms. The chiefeft commodity of this place is, in that it hath Baie beyond the walls, enjoying the delights thereof, and sequestered from the incumbrances. This praise I can give it, that it is to be dwelt in all the year long; for it lieth open to the West-winds, and so receiveth them, that it retaineth them from Baie. Not un-advicably therefore did Vatias make election of this place, where now grown old he might bestow his idleness. But the place doth not greatly tend unto tranquillity; it is the mind commendeth all things.

Now remaineth it that we treat of Tritolæ, Baie, Baulis, and the Promontory of Misenus, with their confines, wherein we will proceed in order as they lie, and not as confusedly seen by us. And to begin with the North-west end of the South-west side of the Bay of Puzole; neart to the place where we left our Boat when we went to Avernus: The crooked land here maketh a little Bay, and after a while riseth bolt upright, upon whose top, and towards Avernus, the Mantions of Marinus, Pompey, and Cesar, are said to have stood; gathered perhaps out of that place of Seneca, where he saith, those to whom at first the fortune of the people of Rome transferred the publick riches, Caius Marinus, Cneus Pompeyus, and Cesar, built them houses in the region of Baie, but seated them on the tops of the Mountains. This appeared more war-like, to behold from above the under-lying Country. Consider what situation they chose, in what places, what buildings they erected, and thou wilt find them to be rather Fortresses than Palaces: Thus Seneca. But Pompey's Villa only stood here. Nothing hath this place note-worthy (for time hath deprived the ruins of their History) but certain wet and dry Baths: the former in a Cave at the foot of the Rock, now not preserved, called heretofore the Baths of Diana. We mounted a pair of high stairs, on the out-side of the Rock, and cut out of the Rock, to the other; where certain Rooms are built for the benefit of the diseased. This Sudatory is entered by a long narrow passage hewn into the Rock, into which we were fain to go backward or stooping, by reason of the vapour, and so excellent hot, that it forthwith bathed us in our own sweat. But hear we it described by a late Traveller:

The dry-Bath high rear'd on a Mountains side
Thrusts forth three arms, which sulphury Mountains bide
In their extremest extents; where swasakie night
Still late retains, preserv'd from Phœbus fight,
Long is the entrance: softer white and hot
Pleas the way in midst of the dry Groat.

In primis celsio sita Sudatoria monte,
In tria divius (specus est) oca brachia, quorum
Sulphureos extrema tenent fumantia fornes.
Solis inaccessus radiis sub rupe cavata:
Ingressu via longa pœci, cinis impedit albus
Acq; calens medice produciens agmine fossæ

Thy

Ingradiendo cave tollas caput, arduus unde
Fumus agit, totoque fluunt de corpore rivi;
Visceribus trahens animam, vapor affluit intus.
Si submissus es, & cautè lumina ferves,
(Nam sine luminibus nulli est intrare potestas)
Victor eris, nimium sed non tentare finitram
Dira tibi mens sit, necet intus perditus aer,
Profruit & nulli tacitas quasvis latebras.

Called this was formerly Fritole, of the rubbing of their bodies; and now by corruption Tritole, or, as others say, for that it cureth the Tertian Fever. There be who say, that it was called of old Trifolus, and do ascribe the Trifoline Wine to this Mountain. It cureth the French Pox, and Fluxes of the head. Men and women have several times allotted them to enter, who sweating here half an hour become prone unto venerie, inasmuch that Christian Widows and Virgins were admonished by St. Jerome to avoid the place. Both above and below these Baths were adorned with Images (whereof some fragments do remain in some of them, which together with adjoining inscriptions, expressed and declared their several virtues.) Defaced (as they say) one night by the Physicians of Salern, as an impeachment to their profit; they were punished for the same by the Sea, being drowned in their return.

Beyond this, where the Sea doth make a femicircled Bay, stood the principal part of

A. The Castle built by Charles the Fifth.
B. Ruins of Diana's Temple.

C. Ruins of the Temple of Venus.
D. The Baia of Baius.

the City of Baia (for both Tritole and Bauli belonged thunto) not the least part thereof stretching into the Sea, the rest possessing the shore, with the fides and tops of the adjoining Hills. It was called Baia the companion of Ulysses here interred, so write they: a place so endued by Nature, and so adorned by Art, that the Lyrick Poet doth celebrate it as of pleasure incomparable:

Nullo in orbe locus Baiis præluet amenis. Hor. No place on earth surpasseth pleasant Baia.

And the Epigrammatist,

Littus beatæ Veneris aureum Baiæ;
Baiz superba dona naturæ:
Baiz superba dona naturæ:
Ut mille laudem Place veribus Baiis,
Laudabo dignè non facis tamen Baiis.
Mart. l. 11. Ep. 81.

The golden shore of blessed Venus, Baia;
The prodigal largess of proud Nature, Baia,
Though in a thousand verses I praise Baia,
Yet should not I deservedly praise Baia.

I wonder why Josephus doth call it a little City; when it is said to have extended five miles in length, and in some places two (though in some less) in Latitude, presenting the shape of a finger. Nor was it undeservedly admired by King Arifolius. A declaration of the magnificency and riches of the Romans; but too much of their luxury; beautified with ample Temples, multitudes of Banias, Imperial places, and the adjoining Maunor-houses of the principal Romans; whither they made their recourse in the time of peace, and cessation from employments. They forced the Sea to retire, and afford a foundation for their sumptuous Buildings. Scoft at in a certain old man by the Lyrick:

Thou Marble past'st to cut, thy end so near,
And thought'st of thy Tomb, dost bouset rear;
Enforcing Baia to usurp the bound
Of muttering Seas; not pleas'd with the dry ground.

Tu secunda marmora loca sub ipsam funus, & sepulchri
Immemor struis domos:
Martij: Baiis obreprensus urget submovere litorea
Parum locuples continente ripa. Hor. l. 1. Od. 18.

Egyptian Canopus, mentioned before, was a School of virtue, compared to the voluptuous liberty of this City. The Inn (saith Seneca) and receptacle for Vices: where luxury taketh the reins, and is (as in a privileged place) there far more licentious, &c. What a sight it is to see drunkards reeling along the shore, the banquetings of such as are rowed on the water, the Lakes reckoning their continual canzonets, and the like: which lasciviousness, as if there lawless, not only sins in, but publisheth? The mind is to be hardened, and removed far from the forcery of enticing pleasures. One Winter only here enfeebled Hannibal; and the delights of Campania did what the Snow and the Alps could not do; victorious in arms, yet by vices vanquished, &c. Thinkest thou that Cato would ever have dwelt at Mica, to have numbered the by-sailing Harlots, and to behold so many divers fashioned Boats, be-painted with diversity of colours, the Lake strewed over with Roses; and to have heard the night-noises of fignets? &c. Who so is a man had rather be awakened with Trumpets than effeminate harmony. But long enough have we contended with Baia, though with vices we can never sufficiently. Thus he; Wherefore no marvel though Venus had here her Temple, when the people were so devoted unto her, and the place it self such an enemy to chastity:

Lavinia, as chaste as th' ancient Sabine were,
(Thoughts then her Stoick husband more severe)
Whilst now Averne, now Lucrine she frequents,
Of bathes in Baian Baths; at length assents,
To lust; her husband leaves in strange fires burns,
Penelope came, as Helena returns.

Castra, nec antiquis cedens Lavinia Sabinis,
Et quamvis vetitico tristior ipsa viro;
Dum modo Lucrino, modo se permittit Averno,
Et dum Bainis sæpe foretur aquis;
Incidit in flammis, juvenemque secuta relicto
Coniuge, Penelope venit, abijt Helena,
Mart. l. Ep. 63.

And Ovid:

Need I name Baia hem'd with sails? Boats rowing
Along the shore, and springs from Brimstone flowing?
Ah, cries some one, and his fell torment shows,
These waters cure not as the rumour grows.

Quid referam Baias prætexata victora velis,
Et quæ de calido sulphure fumat aquam?
Huc aliquis vulnus referens in pectore dixit;
Non hac, ut fama est, unda salubris erat.
Art. Aman. l. 1.

And it should seem that the Baths there had that fame undeservedly; whereof Horace,

Antonius Musa saith, that Baia be
Not for my bealsh: yet take they offence at me,
That in cold water bath, the weather cold.

nam mihi Baias
Musa supervacuas Antonius, & tamen illis
Me facit invidiam gelida cum perior unda:
Ejyl. 1. 5. l. 1.

And though the Physicians hereabout of this time, (but such only as have not read Galen's method, and kill men without punishment) when they are ignorant in the disease, or to seek in the cure, send their Patients to these Baths; yet never was it known that they profited any. They rather tending to pleasure and wantoning: wherof Pontanus the Neapolitan:

You wanton Baia shew, Mistrims,
And fountains too libidinous,
What marvel? Lust doth Age undo:
O Tomacel, dost wine so too?
Falerian liquor old age cheers:
And liberal daughters of Thyons tears;

Salaces refugis Marine Baias,
Et fontes nimium libidinosos,
Quid mirum? senibus nocet libido,
Ac non, O Tomacelle, vina profunt?
Et prodest senibus liquor Falerius;
Et profunt latices Thyoniæ;

Takes

An non & fenibus Marine fomus,
Et prodest remis : quodque prodest,
Basis communis fuit ipfis?
Quid Thermae, nisi molle, lene, mīe,
Rorante Cyathos merumque pocant?

And it may be that other Baths, and new-famed Fountains, are more especially frequented to cherish the diseases of the mind, than to cure those of the body. Should we give them an undeserved Title, or make them say more than the truth, if we produced them thus speaking, as the aforesaid Author did the other?

Nostrum si titulum puella nescis?
Hic est : Prægrava recede alio,
Quæ venis vacua : hoc habet tabella, &c.

Takes ease in age, and sleeps content?
Than Baia what more somnolent?
What crave the Baths but solace, fowls
Discharge'd from cares, and flowing bowels?

Wench, dost thou not our title know!
'Tis this : Come empty, from hence go
Full-belly'd : this contains our table, &c.

The rest I suppress, in that offensively immodest. But I should dwell too long on this place, should I speak of the Ambubaie, certain infamous women, so called for conversing about Baie, incredibly impudent, or other their particular luxuries. But behold an egregious example, that pronounceth the works of mens hands as frail as the Work-men. Baie not much inferior unto Rome in magnificency, equal in beauty, and superior in healthful situation, hath now scarce one stone left above another, demolished by War, and devoured by Water. For it should seem that the Lombards and Saracens in the destruction hereof had not only a hand; but that the extruded Sea hath again regained his usurped limits : made apparent by the paved Streets, and traces of foundations to be seen under water. The shore is all over-grown with bushes and Myrtles, the Vaults and thrown down walls inhabited by Serpents : and what is more, the air heretofore so salubrious, is now become infectious and unhealthful. A number of Caves there are all along the bases of the Cliffs; many of them were employed for Fishponds, wherinto they let in, and excluded the Sea at their pleasure : in which they greatly delighted; and framed and maintained with excessive expences. But especially they delighted in Lampreys, partly for their bellies, and partly for that they were easily kept in their Stews, as not so tender, and longer liv'd than any other. For some of them have been known to have lived threecore years, and some upward. Besides, their familiarity with men was to be admired; having particular names, and coming to the hand, when so called upon. Whereof Martial, speaking of Domitians Fish-pools which were here in Baie :

Piscator fuge, ne nocens recedas,
Sacris piscibus hæ nantantur undæ,
Qui norunt dominum, manumque lambunt,
Illam qua nihil est in orbe majus
Quid, quod nomen habent; & ad magistri
Vocem quævis sui venit citatus?
l. 4. Epig. 30.

Angler, preserve thy innocence, forbear;
For they are sacred Fishes that swim here:
Who know their Sovereign, and will lick his hand,
Than which what greater in the worlds command?
What, that they have names, and when they called are,
Unto their Masters several call repair?

For which they have been of divers incredibly afflicted : inasmuch as Cæsar bewailed the death of one, no less than the loss of a Son; and built a Sepulchre for it. Cains Hirinus who had a Mannor-house also in Baie, was the first that invented these Stews for Lampreys; who received for the houses which were about this Fish pond two thousand Sesterterians; all which he spent in food for his Fishes. He it was that lent Cæsar the Dictator, six hundred Lampreys to furnish his Feasts in the time of his Triumphs, to be paid again in kind, in number, and by weight : for he would neither sell them, nor exchange them for other Commodities. The Tyrants of those times (not, as Augustus, free from this savage passion) took a delight to throw the condemned into these Ponds to be devoured by them; because they would see them torn in pieces in an instant. The Oysters also of Baie were exceedingly commended :

Ostrea Baiensis certantia, quæ Medulorum
Dulcibus in stagnis refuit maris æstus opus.
Accipe dilecte Theon, memorabile munus.
Auson. 38.

Oysters compar'd with those of Baie, fed
By syding Seas in pits of the fresh Lake
Of Meduli, a rare gift, lov'd Theon take.

Sergius Oratus was the first that made pits for them about his house here; more for profit, than to indulge his gluttony. For by such devices he purchased much riches. He also devised the hanging Bannias, and Pools to bathe in, on the tops of Houses.

At

At the foot of the Hill that windeth towards Tritula, stood the Palace of Piso; whereunto Nero frequented often, and calling off state and attendance, accustomed to bathe and banquet. Here those of Piso's conspiracy would have executed their purpose; but he refused to give his consent, that his table should be defiled with slaughter, and the gods of hospitality provoked. Of this nothing remaineth but certain Caves and entrances hewn out of the Rock. More within the Bay, on the bending shore, stand the ruins of a goodly Building, called at this day Trugium. It seemeth to have been a Bannia, by the vents in the Walls for the smoke to evaporate, and by the Pipes which on either side conveyed rain-water into the ample Lavens, and other proofs which these reliques remonstrate. Yet some will have it to have been the Fane of Venus, for she in Baie had her Temple. But whether so or no, the Walls of a magnificent Temple here yet look aloft, seated more high, and almost against the middle of the Bay; not only known to have been consecrated to misplaced Diana, by that testimony of Propertius,

Thæe, Cynthia, in the midst of Baie plac'd
Where ways along th' Herculean shore are trac'd :

Æquid te mediis cessantem Cynthia Bauli
Qua jacet Herculeis femina litroribus.

but by the figures of Dogs, of Harts, and Barbels here engraven, which were sacred unto her.

Now upon the high Hill opposing Tritula, and confining the other end of the Bay, there is a strong Castle, erected by Philip the Second, to protect the under-lying Sea, and places adjoining, from the thefts and wailes of the Turkish Rovers; manned by threecore Souldiers; where the Mannor-house of Julius Cæsar stood, as is to be collected out of Tacitus.

Between this and Misenum lies Bauli, called first Boaula, as much to say, as an Ox-stall; of Gorion Oxen, which Hercules brought hither in triumph out of Spain, where he had a Temple consecrated unto him.

—Baulia this age
Corruptly Bauli call—

Corrupta Boaulia Baulos
Nuncupat hæc ætas —

for the better founding of the word. Here Hortensius the Orator had his Villa, (the ruins whereof are now buried in earth, & covered with water) who greatly delighted in his fish-stews, and was nick-named Trison by Tully; for the fishes herein would come to his hand when so called; who wept for the death of a Lamprey, and to a friend that begged two Barbels of him, (called Mullis in Latine) replied, that he had rather give him two Mules for his Litter. This was afterward possessed by Adonia the Mother of Drausus Nero, who hung a Jewel in the Gills of a Lamprey which she loved. A place famous for the Tragedy of Agrippina, here sealed by her dissembling Son, and invited by him unto Baie, to celebrate the five days continually festival of Minerva; when by the way, (being by night to come, the better to cloak it) in a Galley devised by Anicetus Captain of the Navy at Misenum, by Art made loose in the bottom, she should have been, as if accidentally, drowned. But the apt to distrust, as insured to like practices, or having had some notice thereof given, caused her self to be carried in a Chair unto Baie, where by Nero's artificially pallionate entertainment, discharged of her fears, the returned by Galley (the Sea calm, and the night starry, as deterring to cloak such a villany) with only two of her own retinue: Crepitius Gallus that stood not far from the Stern, and Aceroniæ her Woman who lay at the feet. When with great joy relating the repentance of her Son and her recovered favour, the Watch-word was given, and the heavy covering of the place falling down as was ordered, prett Gallus to death: but that over the Women being stronger than the rest, though shrinking, saved them, the Vessel thereby kept aloft from parting stunder; so that they were fain to sink the Galley at the tide by little and little. Aceroniæ crying, that she was the Prince's Mother, was slain with Poles and Oars; coming to her end by the craft which she used for her fate: Agrippina with silence swimming to the shore, having only received one wound on the shoulder, was succoured by small Birds, and conveyed to her house which bordered on Lucrinus. When eating in her mind the unlook'd for honour done her, succeeding such bitterness of hatred, the fabrick of the Galley (so to dissolve, neither shaken with storms, nor crushed by rocks; the death of Aceroniæ assuming her name, and lastly, the wound she had received; she held it the best course to no take notice of the treachery; sending Agernus to tell her Son of the danger which she had escaped by the goodnets of the gods, and by his good fortunes. But he knowing her craft, and fearing that she should presently practise a revenge, sent Anicetus a Captain of the Navy, and a Centurion of Sea-souldiers to dispatch her; who breaking into her house, and finding her a-bed, it is said that she presented her belly to the Sword of the Centurion; bidding him to strike it that had brought forth such a Monster; and so with many wounds perished. Nero standing by when she was cut up, (therein no less savage than in murdering) surveying every part of her, said to the by-standers, That he thought he had not had so beautiful a Mother. The same night she was burned with bare Funerals, and whilst Nero reigned, unburied. But shortly after enclosed here at Bauli by her household-servants in a simple Sepulchre, called the Sepulchre of Agrippina at this day, which we entered: being placed on the side of the rising ground, partly hewn into the Rock, and now having a difficult entry. The roof and sides are figured with Sphinxes and Griffons: but filled greatly with the smoke of Torches and Lights, born in by such as do enter.

x

beit

Not far beyond, the Land pointed into the Sea, and there following a little by the industry of Agrippa, at Cæsari appointment, and called the Port of Agrippa. Another Navy they kept at Ravenna, both serving aptly for employment; in that from either the one or the other they might make a swift cut, if occasion required, without compassing of Countries, to any part of their Empires within Hercules Pillars. Volsius Proculus was Admiral of this in the time of Nero, and Pliny the natural Historian, in the Reign of Titus. Divers stones hereabout do bear the names of Ships, and naval Commanders, with such like Antiquity. At the mouth hereof are yet to be seen certain ruinous Piles. The innermost part, now a filthy Lake, is vulgarly called the dead Sea.

On the far side of this, and stretching further into the Sea, the Mountain of Misenus riseth aloft,

Misenum solidem, quo non præstantior alter,
Ære citere viros, Martemque accendere cantu.
Virg. Æn. l. 6.

Æolian Miscen, others passing far,
With brass stern fight to excite and kindle war.

Æneas his Trumpeter, and drowned hard by, by the envy (as they fable) of Triton,

At pius Æneas ingenti mole sepulchrum
Impoluit, lueque arma viro, renouque rubumque
Monte sub æreo, qui nunc Misenus ab illo
Dicitur, æreumque tenet per secula nomen.
Idem.

But good Æneas at huge Tomb did rear,
His arms, his ore, and trumpet placing there
Under aerial mound of his name
Miscen call'd, to his eternal fame.

Called Atrius before; or having that Epithete given it, in that, partly by Nature, and partly by Art, it is almost hollow throughout. This Promontory is of all other the most famous for the clemency of the Air, the City here once standing, the Manour-houses adjoining, the Roman Navy, antick Monuments, Fish-pools, Grotts, Baths, and other admirable Buildings; surveying all the Sea-coasts unto the Promontory of Minevea, (if measured with the winding shore, 34 miles distant) all which shewed in the time of the Roman Monarchy like to one entire City. Whereof now (Naples excepted) there is little to be seen that hath escaped the fury of fire, of water, or Earth-quakes. Here Caius Marius had a Villa, with a place more sumptuous and fine than befit such a Souldier, after purchased by Cornelia, and after that by Lucullus, in which Tiberius Cæsar departed this life (prevented by extremity of sickness) in his way unto Caprea. The Vault of Traconaria (signifying a passage for water) is near unto this. A part of the same (as conjectured by some) which was digged by Nero, reaching unto Averna to receive all the hot waters of the Baths of Baiæ; being covered over head, and on each side cloystr'd. But this should rather seem to be made for their receipt of the rain that descended from the Promontory, as appears by the conveyances. It is about twenty foot high, the fallen down roof obscures both the length and breadth. The middle space is contained between two Walls, 18 foot broad, and 200 long. In either side of it a passage there is by four doors into four ample Vaults, the arched roofs being joyned with Walls in the middle. The ruins of the City lye below this: amongst which are the remains of a Theatre, in form of an half Amphitheatre. These Theatres were dedicated to Venus, as the Amphitheatres to Mars; those presenting delights of a more gentle nature.

Where

Where loves imagined are daily sung;

Where fiddles fiddle cantantur amores:
Ovid. Remed. Amor.

yet more anciently to Bacchus; rather from the seeing than hearing assuming that name, of their there presented Dancings, Pageants, and diversity of Spectacles. Marcus Valerius Massala, and Cassius Longinus, were the first among the Romans that adventured to erect a Theatre; although Plays were devised many Ages before.

First Romulus these careful plays devis'd,
When Roman Widowers Sabine Maids surpriz'd.
No Veil the Marble Theatre o're-spread,
Nor Stage with liquid Saffron then look'd red.
But Bowre of boughs, which neighbouring Woods impart,
There rudely framed stood; the Scene lack'd Art.
On seats of rushes the Auditors sit down;
And levy Wreaths their dangling tresses crown.

Primus sollicitos fecit Romule ludos,
Quam iuvit viduos rapta Sabina viros.
Tunc neque marmor eo pendebant vela Theatro,
Nec fuerant liquido pulperia rubra croco.
Illic quis tulerant nemorosa palatia iuvos
Simpliciter positæ; Scena sine arte fuit.
In gradibus sedit populus de cespite factis
Qualibet hirsutas fronte regente comas.
Ovid. Art. Am. l. 1.

But how sumptuous they grew from so rude a beginning, the Theatre built by Marcus Scaurus doth declare, exceeding all other Fabricks whatsoever. It had three Stages one above another, supported with three hundred and sixty Pillars of Marble. The lowest Stage was of Marble; the front of the middle, of glass; the uppermost of boards gilt curiously over. Three thousand Statues of Brass stood Between the Columns; and the semicircle was ample enough to contain fourscore thousand persons. The Furniture of Hangings, Pictures, and Apparel, was answerable to the Magnificency of the Building; and all this done by a private man. The parts of the Theatre were four; the front of the Stage, the Stage whereon they acted; the place where the Musicians played, (in which the Poets also, and Orators pronounced their compositions) and that where the Chorus danced and sung; about which sat the Senators. The Spectators sat one above another round about the round, distinguished according to their quality. The face of the Scene was made so as to turn of a sudden; and to present new Pictures and places, according to the argument then handled. But herein the invention of Curio surpassed; whole two great Theatres, framed of Wood, hung upon two Hooks, which upheld the whole Frame. In the forenoon they were placed back unto back, and Plays exhibited therein; in the afternoon turned about in a trice they affronted each other, and towards the later end of the day joyned them together, made of both one goodly Amphitheatre, (the people never removing from their seats) where Fencers at sharp succeeded the Actors. Thus bore he the Romans between Heaven and Earth upon the trull of the two Hooks: a bold invention, and as bold an adventure. Nero in person oft acted in publick Theatres; although Players were silenced by him in the beginning of his Reign, as before his time by Tiberius, and after by Trajan.

A little removed there are certain Salt-pits, and beyond towards China we came to a Cifern, not undeservedly called Piscina mirabilis. This was entered at two doors in the opposite corners (whereof one now is ram'd up) and is descended into by forty stone-steps. The Vault is five hundred foot in length, and in breadth two hundred and twenty; the Roof sustained by four rows of Pillars, twelve in a row, wherein are divers Tunnels wherewith they draw up water, now yielding a sufficient light to the same. Without, it appeareth but as a rising Bank; the Walls within consisting of Brick, and plaistered over with a composition, as they say, of floor, the white of Eggs, stone beaten into powder, hard as Marble, and not to be soaked thorow by water. The making of this some impute to Lucullus, by reason of the neighbourhood of his mansion; but more probably we may do it to Agrippa for the benefit of the Navy, into which water was conducted from the River Serinus. Those that are called Centum Camerelle (into which also we entered) of the multitude of Vaults for the preserving of water, I rather think to have belonged to Lucullus; mentioned by Varro, Tacitus, and Pliny.

Between Misenus and Baiæ there lyeth a long Plain, called by some the Elysian field, but more commonly Mercati di Sabbato, environed with ruines; heretofore a Cirque; so called of the running about the Obelisks that stood along in the middle, with Horses and Chariots. Tarquinius Priscus built the first amongst the Romans, between the two Hills Palatinus and Aventine, named Maximus; enlarged and magnificently adorned by Cæsar Augustus, Trajan, and Heliogabalus. It contained in length three hundred seventy and five paces, in breadth an hundred and five and twenty; square at one end, and circular at the other; the round and sides compassed with a Rivulet of ten foot broad, and of equal depth; without which were the Walls, containing three Galleries one above another, and built with Seats like an Amphitheatre, where places were assigned to each several calling; large enough to receive two hundred and three score thousand Spectators. Entred it was at twelve Ports. At the square end the Horses under certain Arches had their stand, kept back by a Barrier drawn up upon the sign given. In the midst of the Cirque stood an Hieroglyphical Obelisk, brought by Augustus out of Egypt from the City of the Sun, there erected by Semneferus, an hundred five and twenty foot and nine inches high. On each side of this stood three less, gilt afterwards over, for the other six Planets, all in a row like the lists in a Tilt-yard. They used to strew the floor with the powder of white stone. Nero caused it to be sprinkled with a green Mineral, found in the Mines of Gold and Brals; Caligula with the same, but mixed with Vermillion: Helioabalus with the filings of gold and silver, and sorry he was that he could not with Amber: Although the Cirques were generally consecrated unto Neptune, yet it seemeth that the Sun had a special interest in this; not only in regard of his Obelisk, but of the twelve Games there exhibited in his honour, signified by the twelve gates, and perhaps having reference to the twelve Signs, as the seven times circling the List with their Chariots, had to the seven Planets, and days of them named. That Hieroglyphical Obelisk now standing at Rome in the Lateran, stood in the same Cirque, erected by Constantius, and by him brought from Alexandria in a Galley of three hundred Oars, being there left by Constantine the Great, who had taken it from Egyptian Töcher, (where Kammerher had set it in a Temple to the honour of the Sun), with purpose to have conveyed it unto Constantinople. They adorned these places with the images of their gods and spoils of their enemies. Before the beginning of the race, they carried their Idols about in a solemn Procession. Wherefore amorous Ovid, sitting in the Cirque by his Mistress,

Sed jam pompa venit, linguis animique favete:
Tempus adeli plautis, aurea pompa venit.
Prima loco fertur sparsis victoria pennis:
Huc ades, aequi meus, fac Dea, vincit amor.
Plaudite Neptuno, nimium qui creditis undis:
Nil mihi cum pelago, me mea terra tenet.
Pax juvat, & medea pace repertus amor.
Auguribus Phœbus, Phœbe venantibus adsit:
Artifices in te vertite Minerva manus.
Agricolæ Cereri, teneroque affurgite Baccho:
Pollucem pugiles, Castora placet eques.
Nos tibi blanda Venus, pueroque potentibus armis
Plaudimus, inceptis annue diva meis.

Ovid. Amor. l. 3. Eleg. 1.

The place then cleared by the Prætor, chosen for that purpose, the Chariotters started their Horses upon a sign given, clothed in colours differing from each other:

Si viridi prasinove faves, qui coccina fumis;
Ne has illic transfluga forte vide.
Mart. l. 14. Epig. 31.

those of their Faction wearing the same, which grew to so hot a contention in the Reign of Justinian between the Green and the Blue, that 40000 were slain at Constantinople in the quarrel. Seven times they drove about the list, as is manifest by Propertius.

Aut prius infecto deposcit præmia cursu,
Septima quam metam triverit ante rota.

Or prize demands before the race be done;
Ere wheels seven times about the list have run.

and he reputed the most skilful, that could drive nearest to the ends of the List without danger: whereof Ovid, reproving a Chariotter,

Ne miserum, metam spaciolo circuit orbe;
Tende precor valida lora sinistra manu.
Am. 3. Eleg. 2.

Ab! from the list too far his wide wheels stray;
A stronger hand upon the left reins lay.

A Napkin was the reward of the Victor; as the hanging out thereof a signal to begin. Which grew into a custom upon Nero's throwing his Napkin out at the window flying long at dinner, and importuned by the people to make haste; who often played the Chariotter himself. And to had this pastime bewitched the principal Romans, that divers consumed their patrimonies therein; declared by Juvencius in his invective against one,

Who spent his wealth in mangers, nor doth prize
What Parents left, whilst on swift wings he flies.

Qui bona donavit præsepibus, & caret omni
Majorum cenæ, dum pervola axe citato.
Sat. 1.

And to conclude with the same Poets Satyrical description of these races.

Mean while Circean, an shows do celebrate
Idean races. In triumphant state
The horse thief Prætor sits. In truth I may
With favour of the too great Vulgar say,
To day the Cirque all Rome contains, the cry
Assures me of the Green-coats victory:
Lo! be, the City mourns in like dismay,
As when at Cannæ Consuls lost the day.
Tis better the bold-betting Tomb bestir
To see, who close to his trim Mistress fits.

Interea Megalesiacæ spectacula mappæ
Idæum solemne colunt, similitque triumpho,
Prædo caballorum Prætor sedet, ac mihi pace
Immensæ nimique licet si dicere plebis;
Toram hodie Romam circus caput, & fragor aurem
Percutit, eventum viridis quo colligo panni:
Nam si deleceret, moriamur, ac tantumque videres
Hanc urbem, veluti Cannatum pulvere victis
Consulibus; spectent juvenes quo, clamor & audax
Sponsio, quos cuncta cæce affecit duella.

Juv. Sat. 11.

The catching and killing of Beasts by the hands of men, which were of a more fearful nature, was also presented in the Cirque; thus expressed by Vopiscus in the life of the Emperour Probus: A liberal hunting he bestowed in the Cirque, to be carried all away by the people. The manner of the spectacle was: Great trees by the roots pull'd up by the Souldiers were fastned to pieces of timber, in many places conjoined, which when covered with earth, the whole Cirque did appear as a flourishing wood, into which were thrust 1000 Ostridges, 1000 Stags, 1000 Boars, 1000 Bucks, Goats, Sheep, wild beasts, and other Creatures that live upon grass as many as could be found out and preserved. Then suffering the people to enter, they caught, and carried away what-soever they could. From the West end of this Cirque we descended a little amongst certain ruins, where divers Urns are yet to be seen in the concaves of old walls, containing the ashes of the Romans. Leaving the forsaken Promontory that shewed nothing but desolation, we retired to our Boat, and crossed the Bay unto the shore of Puzole, to a place where the sand is so hot (notwithstanding washed with every Ebb) that like it was to have scalded our hands, though suddenly pull'd forth again. From hence we rowed to Nefis, a little Island, and but little removed from the point of Paustlype; once fabled to have been a Nymph, and beloved of the mountain.

And thee, fair Nefis I thrall, Paustlype,
With ireful plaints he calls upon from Sea.

Te quoque formosæ caprum Nefidis amore,
Paustlype irato compellat ab aquare quatit.
Sannazarius.

Another speaking of the Wine of Paustlype,

Lo here Paustlypis scars shed when he mourn'd,
Whilst flying Nefis to a Rock was turn'd.

En tibi Paustlypis lacrymæ quas fudit ad undas,
Dum fugiens Nefis vertitur in scopulum.
Rita.

And Pontanus describing the Nymphs, declares the condition of the place;

Amongst the Loits by the shore unspide,
Him Nefis clips, black kyed, red cheek'd, grey-cyde.

Illum Nisa tenet deserti ad littoris algam,
Nigra genu, croceisque genis, & lumine glauco.

It containeth no more than a mile and a half in circuit; now the possession of the Duke of Amalfus, and honoured with his house; heretofore with the house of Luculus; the place made healthful by the cutting down of the Woods, which was formerly otherwise. Of which a certain Traveller,

Next Nefis stands with Sprage flor'd, ere while Part of Paustlype, but now an Isle.

Post hanc alparagis plenam Nefida videmus;
Pars hæc Paustlypes quondam, maris insula nunc est.

X 3

There

Multis ibi fœrvat fœtiva conculos atræ,
Antra Typhonæos quondam spirantia fumos,
Et circa Eumenædum nebuloso trifida lūco.

Mergellina. Prochita.

LIB. IV.

There Caves in fœces Barrows Conics hold:
Caves that expir'd Typhœnean fumes of old,
And flames within the Furies gloomy Groves.

It hath a round Tower in the midit over-looking thofe Coasts, with a little Port turning toward the South, making beſides a ſafe ſtation for Ships between it and the Mountain.

So we paſt along the ſide of Paſſiſſipe, clothed with Natures moſt rich and beautiful Tapettry; the frequented ſhore affording diversity of ſolaces; beſides other edifices, bearing the impreſſions of ſundry ancient Structures. Amongſt the reſt, that now called Copinus, a Grot defended into by degrees from the houſe that ſtood above it: once belonging unto Pollio Vibius, and left unto Auguſtus Cæſar by his will. This cruelly luxurious Pollio accuſtomed his Lampreys, kept in this ſtew, to feed upon man's fiſh; into which he threw his condemned Slaves. Upon a time having invited Auguſtus to Supper, a Boy breaking a Cryſtal Glaſs, and for that miſchance being to be devoured by Fiſhes, beſought Auguſtus that he would not ſuffer him to dye ſo wretched a death. Then the Emperour commanded that they ſhould let him alone; and ſwithal, that all the Cryſtals which were in the Houſe ſhould be ſetſhed; which he cauſed to be broken, and thrown into the Fiſh-pool. Thus was the friend of Cæſar to be chaſtiſhed, and well he exerciſed his authority. We will not ſpeak of the roots of Hills here hollowed by Lucullus; for which called Xerxes by Tabero the Stoick; but proceed unto the houſe of Jacobus Sannazarus that excellent Poet, given him by King Frederick, and called Mergellina, which by his laſt Teſtament he converted into a Monastery, having there built a Temple to the birth of the Virgin. And hereſin his Sepulchre is to be ſeen, of a fair white Marble, with his Figure cut to the life: from whoſe mouth the Bees do ſeem as it were to ſuck Honey. On the one ſide is the Statue of Apollo, and on the other of Minerva, though called by the names of David and Judiſh. He is beholding to Cardinal Bembus for this there engraven Epitaph.

Da fœcto cineri flores; hic ille Maroni,
Sincerus Muſa proximus, ut tumulo,
Vir. an. 72. Obiit An. Dom. 1530.

Srew Flowers; Here lies Sincerus in Earths womb;
His Muſe, as next to Maro's, ſo his Tomb.

Living, this other he made of himſelf,

Artus hic fitus eſt, cinceræ gaudetæ ſepulchri,
Jam vaga poſt obitus umbra dolore vacat.

Artus here lies; interred aſhes joy;
Our ſoul by death, now freed from all annoy.

who writ it poetically, and not in contempt of Religion, juſtified by his divine Poem; in the ſame manner he hath named himſelf Artus Sincerus Sannazarus. This is not far removed from the way which paſſeth through the Mountain, where we met our Carols; and ſo returned into the City.

Now upon departing from Naples, I was perſwaded not to venture over land, by reaſon of the inſalubrious ſeaſon (the Dog-Star then raging) proving often mortal to the ſtranger, but eſpecially after a rain; inſomuch, that lately of four and twenty French-men, but four got alive unto Florence. So that I agreed with a Genoſe to carry me in his Felucca to Nepune. But ſtaying too long my Companion, (an Engliſh-man that dwelt at Ligorn) put the Boat from ſhoar, which we were fain to follow in another. Croſſing the mouth of the Bay of Panzole, the Seas grew ſuddenly rough, and we out of hope of ſafety, when by a French Fiſherman we were ſuccoured, and in his Bark tranſported to Prochita, where the other Felucca ſtayed for us.

This Iſland containeth but ſeven miles in circuit; fourteen Miles from Naples, eight from Panzole, and two from Inarime, from whence it is ſaid to have ſlid, and therefore ſo called. It lyeth in a low level; yet Virgil,

Tum ſonitu Prochita alta tremat,
Æn. l. 5.

High Prochita then trembled at the ſound.

rather giving it that Epithete of what it was when a mountain of Inarime, ſeparated, as the Poets do feign, by Typhous:

Ut niſu ingenti partes de monte revellæ,
Æneæam Prochitæque iſtis immiſſerit aſtris,
Ac totum ſubito cœlium tremecerec ittu.
Sannaz.

The Mountain with huge ſtrength aſunder torn,
Æneæa be, and Prochita did throw
To Stars; Heaven trembled at the ſudden blow.

others

LIB. IV.

Prochita. Inarime. Linternum.

others will have it ſo called of Æneæ his King's woman there buried. Fruitful it is in Grain and Fruits, abounding with Conies, Hares, and Phœlants. The environing Seas are ſtored with Fiſh, and the ſhore with fiſh Fountains. To this add we Pomæus his deſcription, making a Nymph of her:

By him goes Prochita his ſponſe, for ſee
And gſture praiſ'd: whom painted garments grace
With railing coebles hem'd, her zone enſaid
With Urbins rough, her breſt green ſea-weeds ſhade.

Hanc juſta conjux Prochitella incedit, & ore
Et geſtu ſpectanda, & picta regimine palte.
Nexilibus coebles limbus ſonar, horrida echinis
Zona tige, viridique ſinus frondeſcit in alga.
Pomai.

A little Iſland almoſt adjoining to the Weſt of this, called the Park; where formerly they accuſtomed to hunt, but now turned into tillage. The Town regardeth the Promontory of Misenus, ſeated on a neck of the Rock, and defended with a Caſtle. Divers ſtraggling houſes there be throughout the Iſland. John de Prochita, a renowned Citizen of Salern, was once Lord of this place, from whence he produced his original, who deprived Charles of the Dominion of Sicilia, and was Author of that bloody Even-ſong, as formerly declared. Provoked thereunto, in that Charles had diſpoſſeſſed him of Prochita; or rather for abuſing his Wife, as is reported by others; whom the Aragonians, that roſe by the fall of the French, made Governour of Valentia.

The weather continuing ſtormy, we ſtayed here the day following, and ſo had the leiſure to ſurvey the near neighbouring Ænaris, called alſo Arime, and Inarime; an Iſland eighteen miles about, and no more, though meaſured with the ſhore; which thruſteth out many beautiful Promontories. In the midit of the Iſland ſtands the high Mountain Epomeus, upon whoſe top St. Nicholas hath a Temple, beſieged with a Fountain of freſh water: The want whereof is here greatly miſſed, there being but twelve in the whole Iſland, whereas there be of hot and medicinable ſprings (beſides Sudatories) five and twenty. For the earth is full of ſubterranean Fires, which have heretofore evaporated ſmoaks, and raiſed moſt of theſe Mountains; therefore was it feigned to cover Typhous:

— the painful priſon Inarime

By Joves commandment on Typhous thrown:

— durumque cubile
Inarime Jovis imperiis impoſita Typhæo.
Virg. l. 9.

for what ſignifieth that name Typhous, but ſuppreſſed Whirlwinds, and impetuous inflammations? Though this Iſle was not called Arime, and Pithouſa (for both ſignifie one thing) of the men here ſigned to have been Metamorphoſed into Apes; yet why not of their crafty and beſtial diſpoſitions? And little better are they at this day; either retaining the ſavage Cuſtoms of their Progenitors, or having their blood dried up with over-much fire; being prone to injuries, violence and ſlaughters. But Pliny ſaith, that it took the name of Inarime of the making of earthen Pots, as Ænaris of the ſtation of Æneæ his Navy. Now called it is Iſchia, which ſignifieth ſtrong, in regard of the ſtrength of the Town (ſome ſay, of the form expreſſing a huckle-bone) regarding Prochita. Seated it is on a high craggy Rock, environed in times paſt with the Sea, though now joined to the ſea by a long paſſage of ſtone; with making (according as the wind doth ſit) on each ſide a Harbour. The Rock is almoſt ſeven furlongs about, affording but a ſteep and difficult aſcent, and that made by mans labour. The Town is ſtrengthened with Iron Gates, and guarded by Italians. The Marquels of Vaſto is Governour of the Caſtle and Town. There are in the Iſland eight Villages. The Inhabitants be for the moſt part poor, yet is the earth in many places not niggardly in her productions. Much more might be ſaid of this Iſland; but I now grow weary of this labour.

The next day the wind blowing favourably, we ſailed cloſe under Cuma; and croſſed a little beyond the mouth of Vulturnus; a River that riſeth in the Country of the Samnites, and gliding by Capua (but three miles diſtant from the ruins of the old) here ſelleth into the Sea; where ſtood a City (now to be ſeen) of that name. Between this and Cuma, but a little removed from the ſhore, ſtand the ruins of Linternum, ennobled by the Sepulchre of Scipio Africanus; who grieved at the ungrateful accuſations of the Romans, abandoned the unkind City; and retiring hither here ended his days, as a man of private condition. By this there is a Lake of that name; and nearer the ſhore a Tower, at this day called Torre della Patria.

A

A little proceeding, Sinnessa shewed us her reliques, so named of the crooked shore, but more anciently Sinope; and then a Greek Colony. Hither the Emperour Claudius repaired, in hope to recover his health through the temperance of the air, and virtue of the waters; but contrarily here met with the Muthrons that poisoned him. At these Baths Tigellinus, a beastly Boy; and a vicious old man, in chief credit with Nero for his luxury and cruelty, received the message of his death (then dallying with his Concubines;) which with a fearful and slow hand, in the end he accomplished. These waters are said to cure Women of their barrenness; and men of their madnes; but men rather here lose their wits with too much sensuality; as women that defiled by the fornication of their virtues; sickness being but a pretence for their gadding; of old jested at by the Epigrammatist:

Diceret & hysterica se forsitan altera Moecha
In fluviolum velle sedere lacu.
Quanto tu melius, &c.
Mart. l. 1. ep. 8.

Another drab to cure the Mather-fits, saith
She must go bathe in Sinnessa's Bath:
Much plainer thou, who when thou goest to do
Such foul deeds, Paula, tell'st thy husband true.

Not far beyond the River Liris hath his Waters diffused on the Sea; who fetcheth his birth from the Apennine, and giveth a limit to the West of Campania; a beholder, and an umpire of many bloody conflicts, and oft invidious to the Traveller. Haliparnassus reports, that he left his course (as that of Vulturnus) and ran back to his Fountain, at such time as Arctodemus was Tyrant of Cuma. There standeth a Tower at the mouth of the River bearing this Inscription:

Hanc quandam terram vastavit gens Agarepa
Scandens hunc fluvium, fieri ne posset possit.
Princeps hanc turrim Pandulphus condidit Heros,
Ut hic fruitori decus, & memorabile nomen.

This soil once spoil'd by Saracens, that pass
The yielding River, to resist like wight,
Pandulphus thus bewick Prince did raise
This Tower, which still renowns the builders praise.

built in the days of Pope John the eighth. The Lobsters of this River are commended by Albionens; whereof when Apicius had tasted (who lived in the days of Tiberius) a man of great substance, and devoted only to luxury and his belly, he feasted himself at Minturnum (a City which stood a little up the stream) that he might at all times, and more liberally feed on them. And having heard that far greater were taken upon the Coast of Africa, he failed thither of people to make proof. But finding it otherwise, (for the African Fishermen fore-knowing of his coming, whilst yet a Ship-board, had presented him with the greatest) without so much as going ashore, he returned into Italy. This was that Apicius that wrote whole Volumes of Cookery; whose luxury and end are expressed in this Epigram:

Dederas Apici bis tricenarius ventri,
Sed adhuc supererat centies tibi lachrum.
Hoc tu gravatus, ne famem & sitim ferres,
Summa venenum potione duxisti.
Nil est Apici, tibi gulo ut factum.
Mart. l. 3. Ep. 22.

Three thousand pounds upon his belly spent Apicius; left five hundred to prevent Hunger and thirst (a fear that near thee went.)
Thou, after this, thou didst in poison put:
Therein Apicius the great greedy gut.

Of the Shrimps of this River, thus speaks the same Author:

Ceruleus non Liris amat quem silva Marica Protergit; hinc squille maxima turba sumus.
l. 1. ep. 23.

Blue Liris loves us, whom Marica's wood
Shields from the Sun's of small shrimps a great brood.

Marica was the Wife of Favus, adored in this wood, standing near the Sea by the Minturnians. For Minturnum (as hath been said) stood but a little above. It sheweth, among other ruins of sumptuous buildings, the ruins of an Aqueduct, a Theatre, an Amphitheatre, &c. In the Marishes hard by Caius Marcius, overthrown by Sylla, concealed himself; when the authority of his aspect did irritate the Souldier that was sent to kill him; and so escaped into Africa.

Between this River and Tybur, lyeth Latium (of whom the Latines) bounded on the North with the Country of the Sabines, taking that name, as most Authors affirm, of Saturnus here hiding of himself from the pursuit of Jupiter; whereof a Christian Poet scoffingly:

Hither

Huber, a God, I like, the aged bide,
Depri'd of rule by some outrageous pride.
Here let me look, exil'd, and to your fame,
The land Iste Latium, people Latines name.

Sum Deus, advenio fugiens; præbere latebras
Occulare senem, nati feritate tyranni
Delectum folio: placet hic tugurius & exul
Ut laceam, genti arque loquo Latium dabo nomen.
Prudent.

But rather so called, for that no Country of Italy lies so broad and open to the view, as doth this between the Sea and the Mountains. We cross'd the Bay of Formie, in the bottom whereof now standeth a Castle, with a Town called Mola; where erst Formie built by the Laconians stood, the recreation and delight of the Romans, as appeareth by some notable ruins. A little above, Cicero had a Villa; slain by Herennius, as his Servants bore him from thence towards the Sea in a Litter; whom he had formerly defended, when accused for the murder of his Father. Of Formie I cannot chuse but insert this (though long) commendation of Martial, since it also toucheth the places spoken, and to be spoken of:

O temperate Formie, O sweet shore!
Set by Apollinar before
All Seats; when tir'd with grave affairs,
At once be quits both Rome and Ceres.
Thy chaste wives Tybur, Tusculum,
The pleasant vacant Algidum, Præneste, Antium, I prize'd are:
Dardan Circe, Circe fair,
Marica, Liris, Salmacis
In Lucrine bath'd, not like like this,
Here mild winds breathe on Tiberis face,
Not dull, but lively smooth; quick pace
The active air to swollen sails lends:
Such, Ladites, when faint heat offends,
(So cool) with purple plumes do raise,
Nor for sum'd prey the line far strays
But fish it tugs from window high
Theron's, whom clear waves betray to th' eye,
When Aolus rage Nereus feels,
Storms flighting, they from Treacher feed
Pike, Turbots, which scarce Ponds breed.
The Lamprey swims to his Lord's invites,
The Beadle the known Mullet cites,
Th' old Barbels bid 'e appear do come.
When these joys shall we enjoy, O Rome!
What days in City-toils lose we,
At Formie to be spent care-free?
O happy Hindes, this happiness
Prepar'd for your Lords you possess!

O temperate dulce Formie litus,
Vos, cum feveri fugit oppidum Martii,
Et inquietas cessus exuit curas,
Apollinaris omnibus locis præfert,
Non ille tandem dulce Tybur uxoris,
Nec Tusculanos Algidique secus flus,
Præneste nec sic, Antiumve tu prætor,
Non blanda Circe, Dardanive Cajeta
Deliderantur, nec Marica, nec Liris,
Nec in Lucrina lora Sarmacis vena.
Hic summa leni stringitur Thetis ventos;
Nec languet æquor; viva fedes ponti,
Pætem phaselion adjuvante fert aura,
Sicut pullæ non amantiss æstatem
Multa labore purpura venit frigus:
Nec feta longo querit in mari prædam,
Sed à cubiculo, lectulæque jactantur
Spectatus alte lineam trahit pisces.
Si quando Nereus lenit. Eoli regnum,
Piscina procellas ruit de sua mena,
Piscina rhombum pacis & lupos vernas,
Nata ad magistrum delicata morans,
Nomenclator muelle mægitat novum,
Et adesse iussi promptus senes nulli.
Frui fed istis quando Roma permittit?
Quot Formianos impeter dies annis?
Negotis rebus urbis hærenti!
O viniores, villicque felices,
Dominis parantur illa, servant vobis;

Mart. l. 10. Epig. 30.

Thow this Via Appia pass'd, of which we shall speak hereafter. Not far from Mola stands Cajeta, retaining the ancient name, where, long before night, we arriv'd. Cajeta stands on the Western point of the Bay of Mola, and of the crookedness thereof was so called by the Laconians that built it, although Virgil;

Thou dying gav'st our shore a living name:
Aeneas nurse Cajeta. Now thy fame,
And ashes in great Italy (if grace
That any give) retain an honour'd place.

Tu quoque lititoris nostris Aeneia rutris
Avernani motiens famam Cajeta dedisti,
Et nunc servat honores sedem tuus, ostiæque non
men,
Hesperia in magna (si qua est ea gloria) figurat.
Fa. l. 7.

Others will have it so called of the burning here of Aeneas's his Navy by the Trojan Women, tired with their tedious Navigations. It hath one only access to it by Land, the rest environed by the Tyrrhene Sea and the Adriatic Bay, which encroaching upon the North-side, lies within the Land like an ample Lake; the West-side bordered almost with continued buildings. But the City and Cattle lye under a high Hill, which which thrusteth into the Sea, and is also included within the same Wall, yet hath little building thereupon; crowned with the Mausoleum of Lucius Munatius Plancus; though vulgarly and ignorantly called, The Tower of Orlando. The building is round of form, and without consists of square stone, lined within with white Marble, and receiving light only from the door. In the fides there are four Concaves where Statues have stood. The top of the Mount is adorned with Spires and Trophies; and the front presenteth this Inscription:

L. MUNATIUS L. F. L. N. L. PRON. PLANCUS. COS. CENS.
IMP. ITER. VII. VIR. EPULUM. TRIUMP. EX. CÆ-
TIS. ÆDEM. SATURNI. FECIT. DE MANUB. A-GROS. DIVISIT. IN. ITALIA. BENEVENTI,
IN GALLIA. COLONIAS DEDUXIT;
LUDUNUM, ET RAURICAM.

The Mountain and Castle are guarded by Spauriards, who will not easily permit a Stranger to survey them. No sooner shall you enter the Castle, but a Coffin covered with black, set on high, presents it self to your view, with this under-written Epitaph:

Francia me dio, laume,
Espannam ex fuerzo ventura,
Roma medio la muerre,
Cajeta la sepultura.

France gave me light,
Spain power and might;
Death, danted Rome,
Cajeta a Tomb.

containing the body of Charles the Bourbon, General of the Army of Charles the Fifth, and slain in the sack of Rome. Name we only the Trophy of Sempronius Atacinus, which stood without the City; pulled down to build the front of a Temple; and the Sepulchre of Vitruvius, feigned to have been Cicero's by the Cajetians: Whereupon Alphonfus hasting thither, caused the Monument to be freed from the over-growing Buthes, but when by the Inscription he found it to belong to the other, he said, that the Cajetians had received Oyl, but not Witdom from Minerva. Many ruins there are hereabout, that yet accuse the foregoing Ages of Vanity and Riot; amongst the rest thoe of the Palace of Faustina (where for the night following we took up our Lodging) in which the lived so voluptuously. Of whom Julius Capitolinus: Many conjecture that Commodus was born in adultery; considering Faustina's behaviour at Cajeta: who dishonoured her self with the familiarity of Marines and Fencers. Whereof with Marcus Antonius was told, and persuaded either to kill or divorce her, he replied, If I put away my Wife, I must restore her her Dowry.

The next day we put again to Sea, rowing along a pleasant shore. We past by the Lake of Fundi, that hath a Town of that name at the furthest end, erected out of the decays of the old, sackt not long ago by the Pirate Barbarossa. This is the Maritime limit of the Neapolitan Kingdom. Terracina a City belonging to the Papacy, appeared to us next; so called of Trachina, in that seated on a ditty Hill; and Anxur, of the Temple here dedicated to Jupiter, Anxurus, which is beardless. Of this Horace in his Journal:

arque sublimis
Impositis faxis late candentibus Anxur.
Sat. 5. l. 1.

And rock-built Anxur rais'd on high,
Whose brightness greets the distant eye.

First built by the Spartans; who flying the severity of Lycurgus his Laws, here planted themselves, then a Colony of the Volsians, and after of the Romans. Near this,

gelidusque per imas
Quirit inter valles aque in mare volvitur Ufens.
Æn. l. 7.

Cold Ufens shrou'd low Vallies seeks his way,
And tribute to the Tyrrhene Sea doth pay.

Three miles below stood the City of Feronia, so called of Viridi gaudens Feronia ludo.

Idem.

Feronia (joyning in green Groves)

a God-

a Goddess greatly adored. It is feigned, that when her adjoining Grove was accidentally set on fire, the Inhabitants going about to remove her Image, it suddenly re-flourished. Multitudes of people frequented her yearly Solemnities; where such as were inspired with her fury did walk upon burning coals without damage.

And now we are come to the Circæan Promontory:

once being an Island; the Marishes not then dried up, that divided it from the Continent. The habitation of Circæ, who expelled out of Sarmatia (where she had tyrannically reigned after the death of her impoyoned Husband) here made her abode. Of this place and her, thus Virgil:

Next on Circæan Coasts they plough the floods;
Where Sol's rich Daughter daily chants in Wounds
Not to be approacht, and when Stars lights assume Sweet Cedar-sorches her proud Roofs perfume;
Who webs divinely weaver. Hence groans resound,
Cbead's Lions roar (disdaining to be bound)
In nights whilst calm. The bristled Boar and Bear
Incensed rage; and monstrous Wolves howl there;
Whose forms the Goddess sell, by virgine strange
Of herbs, from manly did to bestial change.

Proxima Circææ raduntur littora terre,
Dives inaccessus ubi Solis fida lucos
Assiduo resonat cantu, testisque superbis
Ulris odoratam nocturno in lumine cedrum,
Arguto tenues percurrens pectine telas.
Hinc exaudiri gemitus, iraque Leonum
Vincta reculantium & fera sub nocte rudentem,
Setigerique fues, atque in præsepibus urfi
Sevire, ac formæ magnorum ululare luporum.
Quos hominum ex facie, Dea læva potentibus
herbis
Induerat: Circæ in vultus et terga ferarum.
Æn. l. 7.

The Mountain was called Ææ's, of the horrors and calamities of the place. The Fable was fitted to the place, in that producing a number of Herbs and Plants of different virtues. Circæ signifieth no other than the Sun's circumvolution, whose heat and directer beams do quicken whatsoever is vegetable. She is said to have been prone unto love, in that heat and moisture are the Parents of venericous desires; being also feigned to have been begotten by Sol on Persis, the Daughter of the Ocean, and therefore an allurer unto intemperancy; whereby the transformed Ulysses his Mates into Beasts; (for no better are the sensual) whom he by sprinkling them with Moly (which is temperance) an Herb hardly to be found by Mortals, restored again unto their manly proportions. The Mountain mounteth on high, and aloft on the East-side bears the ruins of an old City called formerly Circæ. Below it stands the New, named St. Felice; and nearer the shore a ruine, the supposed Tomb of Elpenor; one, and the worst of Ulysses his Mates, who though restored from the shape of a Swine, betook him again to his cups, and broke his neck in his drunkenness, here buried by him. Near this Amphiclus falls into the Seas and raiseth his head from the not far distant hills of Setinus; of no obscure fame for their celebrated Wines. The Marishes of Pontania do bound the North-side of this Promontory; on the West it hath a calm Bay, and with his Southern Basis repulseth the importunate waves; the noise whereof gave invention to the fabulous roaring of Lions, &c. Certain deep Caves there are on this side, and by Frigots to be rowed into, wherein the Turkish Pirates not seldom do lurk in the day time. The Mountain is set about with Watch-towers. The Goddesses detesting each other, were honoured in this place: called by an ancient Inscription here found, the Promontory of Venus; and in the old City Minerva had her Altar. Tarquinius here planted a Roman Colony; and to this place Angustus confined Lepidus for ever.

From hence we came to Neptune, where they set me ashore, and proceeded on their Voyage. The Country between this and the River Liris is no other than a low Marsh; only here and there certain Hills look aloft, as is declared before, yet producing in divers places the most excellent of Vines, which grow up by Trees, as thole of Cæcubum, Fundi, and Setinus. It was first drained by Cornelius Cethegus, and after by Cæsar, called formerly Pomina, in that ferted over in sundry places, and now Aufente Palude. Of this Lucan.

Et qua Pontinas via dividit udx paludes,
Lucan l. 3.

The wet way that Pontinus fens divides.

meaning the Appian way; extending from Rome by divers circuits unto Brundisium: which entering the Marishes at Forum Appi, hard by the Hills of Setinus, crosses to Terracina; and so leading to Formia, passeth over Liris at Mimurna. This was so called of Appius Claudius, who built it on the sides of square stone, there higher than in the middle for the benefit of foot-men; paved within with flint; and broad enough for two Carriages to pass with ease by each other. At every miles end stood a little Pillar, and every where places were made for the easier mounting on Horse-back. Adorned it was on each side with Houses and Mausoleums, which now here and there do shew their half-drowned reliques.

Neptune doth possess the sole of that ancient Antium; so called, for that it was the first City that stood on this shore; once the chief seat of the Volsians, and then powerful in shipping, although destitute of a Haven. Inasmuch as when taken from them by the Romans, they fixed the beaks of their Ships in the Forum at Rome (called thereupon Rostra) where they made their Orations to the people. It stands upon a Rock, and was much frequented by the principal Romans for their solace, and in their retirements from the encumbrances of the City; so that it might contend with the best for magnificent Buildings. In it Fortune had her celebrated Temple, the Patroness of the City; as speaks this invocation:

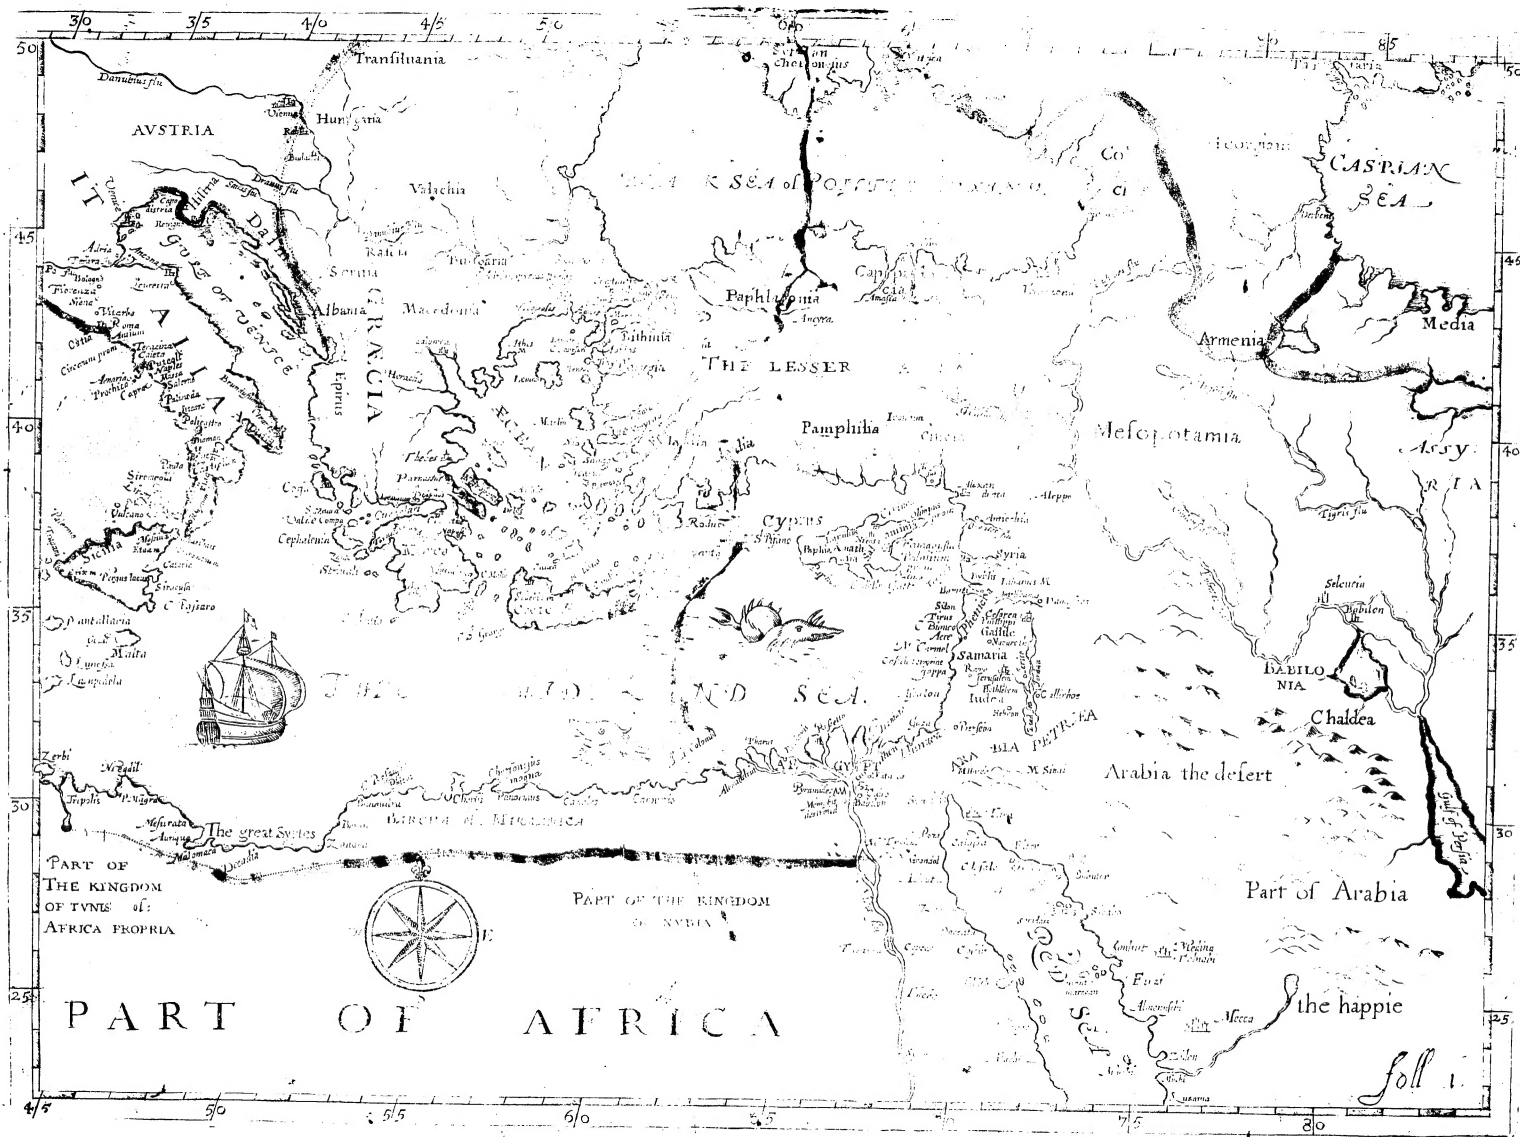

O Diva, gratum quæ regis Antium,
Præfens vel imo tollere de gradu
Mortale corpus, vel superbos
Vertere funcribus triumphos.
Hor l. 1. Od 35.

Sou'reign of Antium not ingrate;
O Goddess, that must mean estate
Hast power to raise, and triumphs proud
In mournful funerals to cloud.

The steepness of the Rock gives a natural strength to the City; fortified besides with two Castles, surveying the Sea, and commanding the shore. The Buildings are old, the Inhabitants none of the civillest, subject it is to the Papacy.

About one of the clock next morning, I departed with a guide of the Town. We entered a great Wood, in the time of Paganism sacred unto Jupiter. Having rid thorow it before the Sun was yet an hour high, we mounted the more eminent soil, which gave us the full view of the large under-lying level. We passed then thorow a Champaign Country, rich in wines and grain, feasted with variety of objects, until the parched earth reflecting an immoderate and unwholesome heat, enforced us to house our selves in an Inn some fifteen miles distant from Rome, unto which we rid in the cool of the evening. Having staid here four days (as long as I durst) secured by the faith and care of Mr. Nicholas Fitz-Herbert, who accompanied me in the surveying of all the Antiquities and Glories of that City, I departed to Siena; and having seen Florence, Bologna, and Ferrara, embarked on the Po, and so returned unto Venice.

Finis Libri quarti & ultimi.

Prospect of the Grand Signiors Seraglio from Gallata

Part of Asia

Santa Sophia

